Frederick Mayger, of Near Beaverton, Perishes in House Fire

SUPPOSED TO BE VERY WEALTHY

Has no Relatives in This Section of the United States

Frederick Mayger, an aged German, was burned to death in a fire which consumed his house, about a mile northeast of Beaverton, Friday morning about 8:40. Neighbors reached the house shortly after the blaze and as soon as the ashes cooled sufficiently to make search found the bones of the dead man. Coroner E. C. Brown went down Saturday, and swore a jury to investigate the death. They found that he had perished in the fire, and the investigation of Gotfried Schlaefli, of above Dr. F. M. Robinson showed that play, as the skull had not been Imperial Hard Wheat Flour, crushed. The old man burned some months ago, and was quite feeble.
