HILLSBORO MAN HAS MEXICAN EXPERIENCE

William J. Wall Has Great Time Getting to United States
SYMPATHIZES WITH REBEL FORCES

Tells of Experience When in Midst of the Insurrection

W. J. Wall, a former Hillsboro man, and a brother of John M. Wall, has crossed the line into American territory, after five years of business as a merchant at Los Mochis, Sinaloa, Mexico, one of the West Coast provinces. To a Santa Barbara reporter Mr. Wall, after getting on American soil, said: "An American in Mexico is perfectly safe, but when he attempts to get out he may experience a few difficulties." He stated that the entire west coast, down to Mazatlan, is insurrecto. Every town in the state of Sinaloa fell into the hands of the rebels in less than a week and was conquered without a battle. Those Americans remaining, however, are bound to suffer inconvenience, as the water supply has been cut off and the reservoirs blown up. Ninety per cent. of the people, he says are rebel sympathizers, and the towns surrender without struggle. The rebels then appoint their own government, and all moves along serenely. Mr. Wall left for the American border in company with a Mexican banker, who was a sympathizer with the Mexican government, and this occasioned him some alarm, although Wall had a pass from the rebels, showing he was favoring their cause. At San Blas, the banker was held for $30,000 ransom, but Mr. Wall was permitted to go his way. The railroad bridges were blown up, and he made his way across the border by means of a hand-car, which was taken in many places several miles before they were able to again place the car on the rails. The company travelled 100 miles on the handcar, with but four "tortillas" as food. Mr. Wall disposed of his business, and will remain in Santa Barbara, Cal., until the war is over.

Ed. Olsen, of below Farmington, in the Jacktown district, was in town Monday.

Sydney Therkill was out from Portland last week. He was much surprised to have an optical proof of Hillsboro's stride.

Erwin Ritter, of Bethany, was up to the city today, on insurance business, and went on out into the South Tualatin section.

Green Walker, of Roy, and who is now within almost a stone's throw of two railroads, was down to the city Monday, greeting friends.

John Seifert, of Centerville, was in town Saturday. John is one of the boys who always make a little piece of money every time he touches a piece of real estate.

Jacktown School, in Dist. 17, M. N. Bonham, teacher, had a short program, literary, and a pie social, at their school house, Saturday evening. There were a number of recitations, tableaux, dialogues, etc., and the entertainment netted $32.45 for the "Comfort Fund."

E. E. Yarnell, of Timber, was down to the city Tuesday. He is starting the construction of a two and one-half story hotel, the main building to be 32x64, with a kitchen addition. Mr. Yarnell says that Timber is destined to be a splendid business point, considering extensive logging operations to start at once.

Mr. Hibbard, of Montana, was in the city Monday, the guest of J. B. Wilkes. Mr. Hibbard is somewhat interested in Washington County property, and has just returned from the extreme East. He says that the financial situation back there is not what it should be, but he finds the West Coast still hammering away with the song of construction and progress. Portland, he says, is making the most rapid progress of any city in the United States considering population.
