

TO PUT NEW CRUSHER IN AT GOODIN SPUR

County Court Expects to Install a
Much Larger Machine

OLD ONE TO BE REMOVED AT ONCE

and Brought to Forest Grove in Near Future

The county commissioners' court will, in the very near future, install a new and larger rock crusher at Goodin spur, and the old one will be dismantled and shipped to the Forest Grove section, where it will turn out the road product.

The court is now asking for bids from contractors for the crushing of rock at Goodin Spur, and bids will be opened March 12 in the afternoon. Of necessity the court will buy a great deal of road machinery this year, and the board is very anxious to get things under way for the Summer campaign of macadamizing. Numerous small crushers will have to be installed here and there over the county where rock is most convenient.

I have a carload of first-class milk cows which will reach Hillsboro on or about March 1. All AI cattle, and will be fresh within a few days. These are good cows and they will be priced to sell off the reel.

Geo. R. Bagley and E. E. Tongue were Salem visitors, last Thursday, arguing the Hill vs. P. U. case before the Supreme Court. Mr. Bagley represented the Hill end of the case, and Tongue appeared for the University. This is the case wherein the Hill boy was injured by a gopher gun's explosion on the University campus, on the archery course. The janitor had set the gopher gun, and the boy, while archery practice was on, ran afoul of the weapon and was badly injured. The University contended that it was immune from prosecution because the institution was charitable in character, and that its endowment was extended only for the purposes of education. The court will take under consideration the charter of the University, but as this is more or less ambiguous, there will probably be some research before adjudication.

The T. W. Wyatt & Co. store was closed last Thursday evening, by an attachment suit brought by R. L. Sabin, representing Portland creditors, and the stock will be disposed of in the interest of the wholesalers. This was the stock that L. M. Hoyt was on a deal to buy, but refused to take over because the inventory did not come up to a certain sum. John Dennis, who held a prior lien on the store, has sued Mr. Hoyt to enforce the alleged contract and the matter will be tried in circuit court.

George Payne Sunday loaded a carload of milk cows for F. R. Beals, of Tillamook County. This is the first carload of stock shipped from this county to Tillamook over the new line. Tillamook is going into the dairy business heavier than ever, and agents are out in various outside counties buying up stock. The contemplation of Summer visitors, and the increase of the cheese business make it imperative that there is a greater milk production over in the coast county.

Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Phillips, and son, W. T. Phillips, returned Thursday evening from Tennessee, where they were for the winter. Mr. and Mrs. Phillips went early in the Fall, and when Mrs. Phillips became seriously ill the son went East to be at the bedside. Mr. Phillips says that while there was no snow down South, the weather was quite bad. He is glad to get back to Oregon, and his wife is mending slowly.

Why pay ten dollars for a map which merely shows Washington County, when you can get one on a larger scale, showing everything from the Willamette River west to the west boundary of the county, size 50x67 inches, for $7.50, or a pocket size, 2 1/2x3 1/2 inches, for $2.00? Get it of your bookseller, or address T. S. Wilkes & Son, Hillsboro, Oregon.

Marshal Blaser has been having the time of his life making people believe that the chicken ordinance is in effect. As a result of his campaign there has been several thousand feet of chicken wire put up in the city, and "biddy" has a strenuous time of it if she is caught outside the enclosure.

A heavy hail storm visited this section Sunday morning, between nine and ten o'clock. Heavy rain fell with canister, and for a minute the ground was white. Heavier hail storms than this, however, frequently falls in the Mississippi Valley, and it looked good to the recent immigration from that section.

JOHN DAY TURNS DOWN HIS FRIENDS

Astoria Centennial Publicity Man
Cashes Bad Checks and Drafts

Turns Trick on W. C. Gifford

Then Goes to Tacoma Where he Makes
Flyer and Gets Away

John Day, who handled the publicity end of the Centennial, last Fall, and who later came to Hillsboro with good credentials, and was employed by the Development League to get together a publicity fund for advertising Washington County, has betrayed the trust of some of his friends and at last reports was a fugitive from justice.

Day cashed a draft on a man by the name of Custer, W. C. Gifford giving him the money on the paper, which Custer, a guest at the Imperial Hotel, Portland, refused to cash. Day went from Portland to Tacoma, where he cashed bad paper ranging in sums of $25 and $50, and then dropped out of sight. He also owes the Oregon Hotel quite a sum, and he is also in bad for cashing a bad check at the Imperial, even while he owed that institution.

Day was paid $100 for his work out here, although he accomplished nothing. He asked for advance payment, and as he had the work well under way at the time, he was given the money. About the time that it appeared that he would get the money paid—all money was to have been paid only to the treasurer of the League—there was created some doubt in the minds of signers as to Day's integrity, and no one would come through with the sponulix.

Warrants are out for Day's arrest, and as he had been in trouble before it is likely that he will get but little consolation in case he is apprehended and brought to trial.

Day is a versatile fellow, and readily makes friends. He borrowed $400 on a note in Portland, on the strength of his contract with the Hillsboro Development League, but when his creditor inquired of the officers of the league he was told that Day had no claim on the organization.

PAVING WATCHMAN DREAMS OF FUTURE

Leap Year and Suffragette Question Give Him a Shock

MEN LOSE JOBS ON THE STREET

Men Found to be Timid and Very Self Conscious

John W. Smith, the deaf mute watchman at the paving plant, has been thinking over the suffragette question, and Leap Year, and the other night he had a dream that startled him—John W. visited a doctor the next morning to see what was wrong with him. He dreamed that he came up town one night, and there was a woman chief of police taking a man to the bastille; two women, a sheriffess and a deputy, were taking a crazy man to the depot enroute for Salem; hardly a man was seen on the street, and those who were out were timidly looking into the store windows, and all wore big picture hats and short skirts. A woman was driving the street cleaning apparatus, and several of the sex—all were attired in a costume that was a cross between the present masculine and feminine garb—were standing around on the corner. Presently a man came rushing up to one of the ladies and implored her to come home as the baby had an attack of the colic. The lady advised him to warm some peppermint and give it to the child, as she could not come home just then, having a committee meeting on some lodge matter. He found a crew of fifteen women putting down paving, and when the men passed they would cast shy glances at them. When one of the women would smile at a man he would blush and look quite confused. The men were doing the cooking—and all lines of occupation were reversed, excepting the splitting of wood—the women still did that. John W. said that he saw a very large woman hurriedly making toward him, and realizing it was Leap Year he started to run, and fell down. As he did this, he fell out of bed, and his topsy-turvy dream came to an end.
