BODY OF LOIS HARRIS FOUND IN THE RIVER

Hillsboro Young Woman Succeeded in Willamette at Portland

LONG SEARCH OF FAMILY ENDED

Wash of Steamers, Foot of Taylor St., Brings Body to Surface

Last Thursday afternoon Sheriff Hancock and C. M. Shaffer went to Portland to view the remains of a body which had been raised by the wash of river steamers, at the Taylor Street dock. The corpse was found Wednesday.

She never had been very strong, and when she contemplated marriage with Geo. Wolf, of Hillsboro, the mother advised against it, telling the daughter that she could not stand a life on a small farm.

Miss Harris left Hillsboro on the morning of Feb. 12, and went to Portland, where she remained over night at the Young Woman's Christian Association rooms. Leaving the next morning, she disappeared. Search was made over several counties. Wolf was at first suspected, the officials thinking that he knew she contemplated leaving, and whether she had gone. The young man denied any knowledge of the affair, and spent several weeks hunting for the lost girl.

It is supposed that the body remained under the dock, where

COUNTY GIVES SUPPORT TO BULL MOOSE MOVE

Wilbur K. Newell Named at Portland as Presidential Elector

DILLEY MAN LANDS FOR TEDDY

Nominee Predicts Washington County Will Swing to Candidate

Washington County is figuring in the "finals," for a resident of the Tualatin Valley has been named as a presidential elector on the Roosevelt ticket. The meeting took place in Portland, Thursday last, and Mr. Newell was in attendance. Washington County gave Roosevelt a plurality last April, his name, like Ben Abou, leading all the rest. Mr. Newell went to the meeting of the Bull Moose supporters without hope of honors and found himself in the running. He is selected without opposition, and he predicts that old Washington County will be there with the bells this Fall when the votes are counted, and that Theodore Roosevelt will sweep the county, leading both Taft and Wilson.

Thos. Withycombe, formerly of Farmington, was at the convention, and figured largely in the deliberations. Mr. Withycombe, like Roosevelt, feels that the tariff is to be more of a vital issue than most people imagine, and the Roosevelt supporters propose that this issue shall not be relegated to the closet or the discard.

The moose has been curried and shod, and his antlers "knobbed," and he is expected to come under the wire without perspiring.

The Roosevelt electors will be on the ticket in Oregon, and this is the first time in history that Washington County politicians of republican instincts have ever countenanced a third party movement. Here and there on the streets you hear men say they are going to vote for Teddy, anyway, come what will. And they will have the chance. Roosevelt carried the county by 200 over Taft at the primaries, with LaFollette a close third.

and the step-father and sheriff she sank, until raised by the wash and churn of the water by the paddles.

The dead girl first knew Mr. Wolf at the Grazz hopyard, in 1910, and they met occasionally, and as well, kept up a correspondence. Owing to the girl's ill health the mother candidly told her that she thought it best not to marry Wolf. To this the daughter appeared to agree, and took no umbrage. Miss Harris was of a very retiring disposition, and was in the seclusion of her room a great deal, rarely breaking bread with the family more than once or twice a day.

The burial took place Saturday afternoon.

Hanson, of Battle Ground, Wash., died Tuesday morning, July 23, 1912, at St. Josephs Hospital, Vancouver, Wash., from appendicitis. She was ill but seven days and death was quite unexpected. Mr. and Mrs. Hanson had been wedded but about seven months. Mrs. Hanson was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Funeral services were held at the Hollenbeck home at Battle Ground, Friday, interment being in the Wilson cemetery. The casket, banked by an immense profusion of flowers, was reposing on the porch during the services, which were attended by a multitude of friends who came from far and near to pay the last respects to one whom they universally esteemed and loved.
