POWDER MAN BLOWN 300 FEET FROM BLAST

Alexander Crawford Meets Violent Death on Railway near Orengo. PATHETIC NOTE FOUND ON BODY. Was Touching off Powder With Three Companions, Saturday Eve.

Alexander Crawford, of Portland, met instant death Saturday evening, about a half mile from Orengo, on the Electric right of way, while blasting stumps.

The severed limb was found 75 feet closer to the stump where the blast took place. The head was also found Tuesday, as were the two arms, which were blown off at the elbow.

B. E. Hogan, a brother-in-law of the dead man, was before the jury, and stated that Crawford had a wife and three small children, the children being aged 5 years, 3 years, and one an infant.

A pathetic side of the tragedy was a note found on Crawford's body, reading: "Dear Daddy: I am going to have a mask for Halloween night. I want you to come home."

Crawford was said to be about 40 years of age, and was considered an experienced powder man. His exact address in Portland was not learned, but his wife was not located until Monday afternoon.
