HELP FIGHT THE

Great Red Plague

Citizens of the state are urged to inform themselves regarding this plague which is causing great suffering among boys and young men, and especially among the innocent girls and women of the state. Parents are urged to protect their children, and provide clean, wholesome information in place of the unclean misinformation they cannot now help getting.

Madero has been killed. This should satisfy the bondholder who has always loved Diaz Sr. and now upholds Diaz Jr.

Washington County people may think that taxes are high enough now—but if they will hold their breath until the next year's tax becomes due and the state tax gets a crack at them, they will know, to the fullest extent, just what high taxes mean.

The Society of Equity, a farmers' organization, is gaining a big hold all over the country. It bids fair to eclipse the Farmers' Alliance, a movement that swept the middle West a few years ago, and for some years controlled several state legislatures. The new institution has been tried in several states and has been a bulwark of power. The big fellows have been organizing for years, both in politics and business—and it is about time that the farmers, who have been hopelessly divided, get together on common ground.

H. Tober and N. P. Rasmussen, near Farmington, were in the city yesterday afternoon.

A. J. Frost and wife, of Oroville, Cal., are guests in Hillsboro, at the home of H T Bagley and wife.

Clerk Luce reports $200 more receipts in his office for February than for the corresponding month last year.

The Kinton Band will give an oyster supper at the Kinton school house, Saturday evening, March 8, 1913. All are invited.

The county court is this afternoon having a re-hearing in the case of State versus Wm Geiger, ordered committed to the State Hospital, last evening.

There will be a social dance at the North Plains Woodman Hall, Saturday evening, March 8. Toelle's orchestra. Tickets, $1. Everybody invited. 50-51

Hillsboro people are more or less interested in the possible divorce proceedings between United States Senator Bourne and wife. They have lived apart for several months. Mrs. Bourne is a sister of Thos. W. Wyatt, who formerly conducted a store on the corner of Second and Main.

The Lyda school district, above Gales Creek, can boast of one of the finest and best equipped school houses, one-room and modern, in the county. The new building was recently completed at the cost of $1,200, and is now being occupied. Miss Millie Miller, is conducting a nine months school in the district.

A bargain—We have a few odd lots of wallpaper, perfectly good, but in broken lots, that we are anxious to close out to save expense of moving to our new store, that we are to occupy on Second Street. We will sell these lots at greatly reduced prices. Sale begins Friday, Feb. 28. First come, first served.—J. Murrow.

The "Dalton Boys," at the Peoples' Theatre, Monday and Tuesday, was a record-breaker so far as crowds were concerned—and the reel was certainly worthy of the attendance, because it was one of the finest photo plays. Next Monday and Tuesday, the Peoples' will present a two-reel drama, entitled "The Open Road."

I represent Spirella corsets—not sold in stores. Will call at homes on request, and do the fitting, and teach how to adjust and wear the corset. Our tailored made-to-measure corsets, including the latest front lace, with an experienced corsetier service, cost no more than high class corsets purchased in stores.—Mrs. M. E. The Butt of the Camp

By SADIE OLCOTT

Hanging about a mining camp in the far west was an Indian girl whose name was so unpronounceable that she was called Sal. She was not the typical Indian maiden of song and story, but a real daughter of the forest, which means that she was not beautiful, not over clean, and her hair hung down, coarse and straight, on her shoulders. At least it would have hung straight if it had been combed.

Sal was not popular with the campers, but she could be made useful for a very small expenditure. Men who had an accumulation of unwashed dishes could hire her for a few cents, an old piece of ribbon or some tobacco to do the job so that they could start anew with their tableware and use it all over again. A dealing like that is always sure to get all the coffing that springs from ill temper, and Sal had no one to divide it with. If any one lost anything she was accused of having taken it and ill treated until it was found, which was often in the possession of the owner. The Indian is proverably revengeful, but Sal seemed unusually patient under the rough treatment she received. All wondered why she didn't stay with her people, who were settled on their reservation on the other side of the divide, but despite her ungainliness Sal seemed to realize that whites were superior to redskins, and she would rather be the butt among the former than stand high among the latter.

One day Sal got in the way of Tom Barton when he was stamping his way through the camp in a very bad humor. He gave her a bat on the side of her head that sent her to the ground. A young and comely man called Ohio Sam, he having come from the highly civilized state of that name, saw the transaction and was so licensed at a man striking a woman that he walked up to Barton and batted him as he had batted Sal. Barton was too cowardly to fight, so he took it out in jawing. As soon as Ohio Sam was convinced that he was not called upon to give the fellow any satisfaction he turned and walked away.

A coward, a mean coward, who will domineer over those he can safely impose upon, though he will not stand up in open fight, will usually take a mean revenge. Sal seemed to understand this better than her champion. She kept an eye on Barton, expecting that he would manage some day to get the drop on Rowley, which was Ohio Sam's real name, and shoot him before he could draw.

One night Rowley was awakened by a pistol shot within a few feet of him. There was just light enough—it was coming dawn—to see two persons at the entrance of his cabin. One was Barton, with a smoking pistol in his hand; the other was Sal, whose hand was under Barton's weapon. It was evident that she had just knocked it upward. The villain retired and was not seen around the camp again.

Rowley, sensible of Sal's having saved his life, after this treated her with as much consideration as he could one of her low degree. This seemed to encourage her to tidy up a bit, and she appeared in a white woman's discarded dress that she picked up somewhere. One day she went to Rowley and told him that his enemy, Barton, was hanging at a distance about the camp and she believed he was bent on mischief. Rowley had best avoid going out where he could be shot in the back. The young man smiled and said he didn't believe Barton quite so low as that and thought no more about the matter.

That same evening, having occasion to go beyond the camp, he was walking along when he heard two shots in a wood by the path and thought he heard a woman's cry. Turning toward it, he came upon Sal lying on her back with a bullet hole in her forehead. She was dead. Seeing a man's legs on the ground, his body concealed behind a tree, Rowly went to where it was and found Barton gasping. He died in a few minutes from a bullet wound behind the ear.

It was perfectly plain that Sal had again saved his life, and this time at the expense of her own. Taking her up, he carried her to the camp, and as the denizens gathered round while Rowley told the story hats came off one by one and there were those who had imposed on the girl whose eyes were moist.

Rowley sent word to the girl's people asking if they wished to show their dead kinswoman any funeral honors. They responded: "Sal no good. Sal leave her own wigwam to be white people's slave. We no want her."

This was the reply Rowley received with regard to a girl who had owned his life, yet gave her own for its preservation. The message stung him. What had he done in acknowledgment, in repayment for her first interposition? He could do nothing for the second. Sadly he arranged for the interment of the body, and when it took place those who had not given a kind word to the Indian girl in life stood reverently about her grave, each casting in a green sprig.

Somehow Rowley was never the same man after the tragedy. He could never forgive a selfish world for ill treating one who was so unselfish. He did not blame himself for not having shown a more perfect acknowledgment of the girl's interest in him, for there was nothing that he could have done. The board he erected over her grave he simply marked "Sal."

She's Barred.

The girl with the ruby lips we like,
The lass with teeth of pearl,
The maid with the eyes like diamonds,
The cheek like coral girl,
The girl with the alabaster brow,
The face from Emerald Isle—
All these we like, but not the jade
With the gardenyx smile.
