There were good delegations from Forest Grove and Cornelius, and the session was one of the most successful for years. The next meeting will be held the first Thursday in October, at Cornelius.

First Congregational Church

A very beautiful custom has been established of recent years in our country. It is known as "Mother's Day." It is, as the name indicates, in honor of Mother, whether she is still among the living or has passed beyond the Veil that separates the seen from the unseen. Hallowed and tender memories cluster about the Name, and when a Nation wears on a particular day a common emblem, the effect is beyond expression. The day is the second Sunday in May and the emblem is a flower—a white Carnation. Let each of us wear next Sunday, in honor of Mother, a white carnation—the floral emblem of purity. Evan P. Hughes has been asked to speak on a theme suitable to the day, and he has selected the subject "The Throne of the Mother—Home, Sweet Home." The Choir is preparing special music appropriate to the hallowed significance of the day. All are very cordially invited to join in this service at the Congregational Church, 11.00 a. m., next Sunday.

Notice to Contractors

Sealed bids will be received by the County Court of Washington County, Oregon, at the court room at Hillsboro, Oregon, on Saturday, May 10th, 1913, at 2 P. Keeping Him Alive

By F. A. MITCHEL.

The old colonel lay dying. His son, a captain in the army in the Philippines, was on his way to see his father before he died and was expected every hour to arrive. He was the apple of the old soldier's eye. They had fought together in the Spanish-American war. The colonel had seen his son wounded and carried past him to the rear, but had refrained from any further expression of grief than a "God bless you, my boy," and had pressed on at the head of his regiment. The son had recovered and after peace came had been sent to the United States possessions in the Pacific. When it was known that the colonel had not long to live the son was notified and, having secured a leave of absence, sent word that he would start for home immediately. They told the father that his boy was coming, and for a time it buoyed him up wonderfully. But his disease was rapidly wearing him out, and he soon fell back again. "Doctor," he said to his physician, "can you keep me alive till my son arrives?" "I shall try, colonel." "But you must." "I can't work a miracle." The colonel was just satisfied. His doctor was an old man brought up in the old time school, and his patient wished for younger blood, one who if he could not defeat nature's laws could by daring and a knowledge of her workings produce some marvelous results. So the next day he called in a young man noted for his original methods and, dismissing the old doctor who had been attending him, placed himself under the younger doctor's care. These were the instructions he gave him in the language he would write an order: "You are not to attack my disease with a view to curing me. You will use every effort, take every risk, to keep me alive till my son arrives that we may meet once more on earth. In case you succeed $5,000 will be paid you from my estate by my son, whom I shall instruct verbally to do so. If I am able to give him the instructions you will receive the money. If I am not able to give them you will receive nothing but an ordinary fee." Never did a young physician have a better chance to make a start in his profession. The doctor devoted himself personally day and night to his patient. Ten days remained from the time he was engaged before the captain could possibly reach the bedside of his father. Every stimulant known to the profession was administered to the invalid, but in spite of all of them he gradually sank. Eight days passed, and there was barely enough strength left in him to keep him conscious. Then came a message that the ship in which the son was coming was making port at San Francisco. When a telegram was received announcing that the captain had left the Pacific coast for home it was known that he would arrive on time in three days at noon. The doctor told the colonel of the time his son would be with him and urged him to nerve himself to fight death. "He is coming," said the old soldier resolutely, "and I will hold the position till he arrives." But twenty-four hours before the captain was due a severe storm set in, and the weather conditions have a marked effect on those struggling with disease. The old soldier held out manfully till the morning of the day his son was expected to arrive. Then he fell away so rapidly that his doctor felt obliged to administer the most powerful heart stimulant known to the profession. It revived the patient, but not for long. Then oxygen was applied and lastly galvanism. By such means the doctor succeeded in keeping his patient alive till the hour and minute the train was due. Then came word that it was an hour late. For a moment the doctor was staggered. Then he resolved on what proved a stroke of genius. The colonel lived near an army station, and the doctor telephoned the station to the commandant and asked him to send a detachment, with firearms and blank cartridges. In half an hour twenty men under command of a sergeant were before the colonel's door. A carriage darted up to the house, and a young man alighted and ran inside and upstairs. Kneeling by the bed, he exclaimed: "Father!" But there was no reply. The colonel was unconscious. Going to the window the doctor cried to the sergeant below: "Beat the long roll!" The sick man heard, and a light came into his eye, a flush into his cheek. "A volley!" cried the doctor. Twenty rifles sounded at once. "Turn out the guard!" cried the colonel. "The enemy is upon us!" Then, seeing his son: "My boy! My boy! I feared you would not arrive in time." A light came into the father's eye, a tinge of red to his cheek, as his son put his arms about him and kissed him as he had done when a child. Then the old man's words became indistinct, and he closed his eyes with a faint "Good-by."

But another volley infused still more life, and the colonel lived several hours

DAMES AND DAUGHTERS.

Mrs. Jane C. Rich, New York, has celebrated her one hundredth birthday. Mme. Mathilde Cotterly, who is still on the boards in this country, was a child actress in Berlin nearly fifty years ago. Miss Jennie Sloan, a blind girl, living in St. Louis, has sent to the White House a broom which she made specially for the president. Mrs. E. H. Harriman has made an offer to the American Museum of Safety of three medals to be presented each year to the railroad and its employees which best devise means for reducing the dangers of travel. Miss Helene Dutrieu is the first woman aviator to whom the ribbon of the Legion of Honor has been awarded. Of all the women who have taken to flying she is the only one who has, as it were, kept pace with the leading aviators. In many instances she has surpassed them in her achievements. Miss Ethel Sargent, who has been elected president of the botanical section of the British association, is the first woman to receive such an honor. Miss Sargent's special study is the anatomy of the seedlings of the monocotyledons, a class of flowering plant which have a single seed leaf in the embryo. Pen, Chisel and Brush. Industrial Items.

This country employs 800,000 women in its industries. The United States annually produces time valued at $14,000,000. The yearly record of the industry is 30,000 deaths and 600,000 serious injuries. In France the minimum rate for miners is 3 cents and rarely ever exceeds 7 cents an hour. In the United States are 735 mines, each of which produces more than two hundred thousand tons annually. Science Findings. A microscope using X rays has been perfected by a French scientist. An English engineer has discovered nearly seven gallons of oil from a ton of common seaweed. Dr. O. F. Samuels, Brooklyn, has discovered that ether may be successfully used hypodermically. The latest invention of the German engineer Foettinger is a steam turbine that propels ships by setting in motion a pump which in turn drives a turbine acting directly on the propeller shaft.
