A Desperate Situation

BY EUNICE BLAKE

At an Episcopal mission on the Chi prese coast situated far from any white ttlement the Rev. Mr. Waterman, a on and hungry looking bachelor of lorty-five, went to the superintendent, Mr. Blanchard, and said:

"I have been laboring in this field now for twenty years and have never been associated with any but Chinese during that time save only my co orkers. I must resign and go to ansoner field."

Mr. Blanchard, unwilling to lose v duable an assistant, said:

Supposing, brother, a companion could be given you-a wife to labor a ith you and theer you." Mr. Waterman thought in that case that he could stand it awhile longer, I it he didn't know where the wife was to come from. There were only arried white women at the station, and he would not marry a heather Chirisse woman. Mr. Blanchard told him that there were women without huslands in civilized lands who might be laduced to come out and marry a clerryman.

A few months after this conversaton the Rev. Mr. Southgate, twenty five years old and a bachelor, was tanding on the dock belonging to the ation awaiting the coming of a ship that appeared to the eastward. He was so homesick that anything coming from a Christian land interested him. and his object in being on the dock was to see a ship that had come from the hand be loved.

When the ship was docked and the rangplank in position the only woman who came down it was not only white. but comely. She seemed much cast down. Mr. Southgate approached her, raised his hat and asked if he could do anything for her.

"I have some business with the Rev. Mr. Waterman," she said, "but I don't wish to go directly to his house. Can you direct me to a place where I can odge temporarity?"

"Let me take that bag," was the reply, "and the other things. I will think of some place for you while we are walking to the station. There is not much in the way of accommodation here. How long will you need a todging place?" "That I can't say. Do you know Mr.

Waterman?" "Oh, yes, very well."

"What kind of a person is he?"

"A very excellent man indeed." "Is he good looking?" "Oh, no. Mr. Waterman is looking." "How old is he?" "Between forty-five and fifty."

"Light or dark?" Neither. He has red hair and many freekles. The young woman stopped. Mr. Southgate looked at her inquiringly.

"I'm going back on the ship," she "Going back on the ship?" "Yes" sobbing-"I came out here to marry Mr. Waterman, not knowing anything about him. From what you my he must be frightful." There was a long silence, during which the young woman wept,

"You are sure you wouldn't marry Mr. Waterman?" "Yes, I am. I'll jump in the sea first. I have nothing to go back to and am desperate. Perhaps the best thing I can do is to drown myself." "Oh, dear, no! You needn't do that.

Would you be contexted to remain here as the wife of a man about my "Perhans," was the indefinite reply.

"I wouldn't mind belping you out; that is, if you would permit me." There was no reply to this, but the sobs were less frequent.

"If you're going to take me," con tinued Mr. Southgate, "it might be less embarrassing for you to marry me before you see Mr. Waterman." 'Perhaps It would."

"But there must be some reason given. It must be reported as a mistake." "You might tell me you are Mr. Wa

"That would be untrue." "I have never told a lie, but I have never been placed in such a position before I will say that I forgot the name; that I thought it was South gate."

"There comes Waterman, now." "Oh, heavens!"

"Let us turn down this walk." The sight of Mr. Waterman struck the poor girl with terror. She clung to her escort and trembled. They met a young clergyman, and Southgate said to him:

"Marbury, got anything to do jus now?"

"Nothing particular."

"Go to the chapel; I wish you to do something very particular." Marbury consented and in a few pringles was joined by the couple.

"Marry us," said Southgate. "Marry you!" "Yes. This young lady came out here on a venture to marry old Waterman. I'm her only hope." The marriage ceremony was per formed and the two were made one

When it was over Southgate said to Marbury: "Go to Blanchard and tell him. Get him to fix it up with Waterman, that's a good fellow." "I'll do it. Are there any more like you coming?" he asked the bride. She smiled and said, "No, I hope not for your sakes."

Mr. Blanchard fixed the matter by sending Mr. Waterman to civilization to find a wife for himself.

'Tis love that makes the world go round As has been said before; "Tis love that causes wheels to turn; "Tis love that urges men to earn The bread they need and more;

"Tis love that brings the teardrop to The sighing maiden's lash; Love lures the cornstalk from the ground; love that makes the world go round-But mostly love of cash.

Fatal Recognition.

The minister's wife was busily engaged one afternoon mending the fam ily clothes when a neighbor called for a friendly chat. After a few moments of news and gossip the caller remarked, as she began to inspect a basket of buttons: "You seem to be unusually well supplied with buttons of all kinds. Why, there's one like my busband had on his last winter's suit."

"Indeed," said the minister's wife with a sigh. "Well, all the buttons were found in the contribution box and I thought I might as well make some use of them. What-must you go? Well, goodby. Come again soon."-Philadelphia Ledger.
