PIONEER METHODS OF STOPPING THIEVERY

James Gibson, of Reedville, Details How Indian Was Whipped

CHIEF CONSENTED TO THE PENALTY

Incident of Sixty-Five Years Ago Fresh in Gibson's Mind

James Gibson, the second in pioneerage in Washington County, and who will see his 80th birthday in April, was up from Reedville, yesterday, to visit the demonstration train. Mr. Gibson is still hale and hearty, glad that he is a live, and glad to see others living. His memory of pioneer events is very clear. When he was fifteen years of age he witnessed the whipping of an Indian thief, and he says the scene still is fresh in his mind, as if it were only yesterday. He lived with his father on the Calapoia river, and the white settlers were very much annoyed by the petty thieving of an Indian. The chief was against such methods, and when the deprecations became unbearable young Gibson was detailed to see the head of the tribe and see what punishment would be proper. After a conference the chief finally agreed that he would bring the culprit to the Gibson farm and permit him to be whipped in the presence of the settlers, a tribesman to wield the hazel.

Fifty lashes were to be applied, but after the thief had been tied to a tree and had received 25 lashes the settlers were satisfied and told the chief to desist. Young Gibson acted as spokesman, and told the Indians that the punishment was sufficient. There was no more thieving from the settlers after that. Mr. Gibson talked jargon fluently in those days—and still knows how to converse in the language that was not uncommon those days between the whites and reds.

MISS MARY GASTON

Miss Mary Gaston, a daughter of the late Joseph Gaston, died at Pasadena, Cal., Jan. 30, 1914, after a year of illness. Her mother died in 1898, and her father passed away last year. She was born in Circleville, Ohio, in 1856. The funeral took place in Portland this week. Miss Gaston was well known at Gaston, where her father resided for a number of years. She has steadily failed since the death of her father, in July, 1913.

Hon. James Withycombe, of Corvallis, has announced his candidacy for governor, and will make a strenuous campaign for the primary vote. Mr. Withycombe is well known here, where he resided for a great many years before he became identified with the Oregon Agricultural College. With so many candidates in the field there could be stranger things happen than he should be nominated. Mr. Withycombe, since he last ran for governor, has formed a wide acquaintance all over the state, and he should at least have an even break before the electorate.

Modern Fairy Tale

The Fairies Always Bring Things Out Right
By M. QUAD
Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

It was midwinter.
The snow lay nine feet deep on the ground.
There was an old woman who lived in the midst of a vast forest. She was wretchedly poor.
We find this poor old woman crouched over a dying fire and listening to the moans of the winter gale and saying to herself:
"May heaven help me this day!"
Finally she rose up and hobbled forth to hunt for a stick of fuel.
A banker with a big loan out at 17 per cent would have wept to see that hobble.

After incredible hardships and sufferings the old woman found herself possessed of a single stick. It was about large enough to brain a grasshopper with, but she was plowing her way back with it when a harsh voice railed to her.
"Theifess, drop that wood!"
"Sir, I am no theifess," replied the old woman as she drew herself up with dignity. "I have been out searching the fields for a little wood to keep me from freezing and have found only a twig."
"You are a liar! I have caught you with the goods on!"
"If I had a son, sir!"
"You have two of them, and they are in jail for hog stealing!"
"I am freezing, and I picked up this little twig to save my life."
"You have got a cord and a half there! Drop it!"
"But I shall perish."
"Perish and be hanged to you!"
"You shall not drive me to my death!"

It is not too late in the day to say that the name of the man was Fitzhuc Carlton and that he was young and wealthy. He belonged to five clubs and owned seven autos. He was also more or less engaged to four different girls. He had given to the heathen and to the hookworm cure and was rated as a young man of great charity, and yet here he was refusing a poor old woman a fagot dug from the snow? She could not realize it and stood gazing at him with the fagot hugged to her breast, when he said:
"Oh, you won't, eh? Well see about that!"
And he whistled for his seven bulldozers, and when they came he pointed to her and shouted, "Stubby!" and the seven plied on to her in the greatest harmony and abandon. Her cries rent the air, but he whistled "Yankee Doodle" and trotted and walked away.

It was a shocking thing to do.
Even the crowd cried out against it.
The dogs did not quite finish the old woman. There was a small piece of her left, and it crawled to her legs and moaned and wept and cried out:
"Must I perish here? Is there no humanity left in the world?"

"There is, grandma, dead loads of it!" exclaimed a cheerful voice, and the frozen and dog bitten woman raised her head to behold a fairy standing in the door. It was Pinky Pink, whose specialty is hunting out aged females and working surprise parties on them.
Just behind Miss Pink was a waiter from a first class restaurant, and on a server he had a meal consisting of frogs' legs, oysters fried, portebush steak, hash brown potatoes, Maryland chicken and various other things warranted not to produce colic.
"What is it?" faintly asked the victim of man's inhumanity.
"You are to fill up, grandma, and then come with me."
The effect of the meal, with a small bottle after it, was to make the diner sleepy, and she gave way to it. Two hours later she awoke to find that she was no longer grandma—no longer a freezing, starving old woman. On the contrary, about forty years' worth of gray hair and wrinkles had been peeled off, and her figure was that of a sylph. No one ever saw a sylph, but we all know what a boss figure one has. She had on a skin tight skirt, and as she walked, or tried to walk, she had a gait between that of a camel and a turkey trot. Her blond hair was done up in the latest style, she had on satin slippers, and she had a beautiful packer to her mouth.
"Where am I?" she asked after looking around.
"In my palace," replied Miss Pink.
And now about Fitzhuc Carlton. The fairy didn't have so much business on her hands that she couldn't attend to his case. She began by taking the creases out of his trousers and humiliating his pride.
Then she worked it to have him find that he was a year behind the fashion in neckties and collars.
Then she had him bounced out of his clubs.
Mr. Carlton also lost his seven autos. Also the four girls to whom he was almost engaged.
Then, having nothing in particular to live for, he returned to the forest wherein he had first met the old woman. It was remorse that took him there. It was remorse that suggested that he take an old clothes-line along.

To a limb of a tree hanging right over the hut where grandma had starved and frozen he attached that rope.
Then to the rope he attached his neck.
After many days they found him swinging there.
And the gale it moaned. And the snow it blew. And an owl sat on a dead snag and fluttered its tail and cried:
"To-whit-to-who-oo-p!"
