FIELD WORKER MARIS SPENDING WEEK HERE

Organizing Industrial Clubs in the Schools of County

HUSBANDRY IMPORTANT FOR PUPILS
Winners of Prizes Will Get Valuable Premiums

Industrial field worker, N. C. Maris, of the State Department of Education, is spending the week in the county assisting Supt. Barnes in organizing Industrial Clubs in the public schools. They are meeting with great success, the teachers cooperating and the pupils responding enthusiastically, and a club has been organized in every school they have visited.

Mr. Maris says there can be no doubt about the wisdom of the club plan introduced by State Superintendent J. A. Churchill, and cooperated in by the Oregon Agricultural College. The idea of effecting and conducting an organization like grown-ups appeals to the boys and girls. The idea of learning to do, and doing the work that grown-ups are doing, doing a man's or a woman's job, and receiving commensurate compensation, appeals to them. The opportunity to win one of the capital prizes, a free trip to the State Fair and membership in the school camp; or a free trip to the Panama Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, appeals to them. The fact that other boys and girls are doing the same thing, that other schools throughout that state and in other states are organizing clubs; that it is the popular thing, and "everybody's doing it" appeals to the child very strongly, and makes the Industrial Club movement a very popular one.

It is a grand and practical work with many valuable features, not the least of which is the dignifying of labor and popularizing the farm in the minds of the rising generation, and correcting the maudlin idea that has been far too prevalent, that it is a disgrace to work at manual labor and that the farmer is a "rube" or "hayseed." In his talks to the children, Mr. Maris emphasizes the fact that all legitimate work is honorable and that all great men are hard workers. He encourages them to take up some form of work such as gardening, poultry raising, pig raising, manual arts, canning, baking, sewing, etc., to form permanent habits of industry, thrift and economy; to earn some money and learn how to save and invest it. He shows them by facts and figures that the cities are congested and the professions over-crowded and that there are greater opportunities in the industries and on the farm than elsewhere. He tells the girls to learn to cook and sew and do all the plain household duties and fit themselves to be good wives and mothers, than which there are no more important accomplishments and no more laudable ambition or important position to which a girl can aspire.

To our minds this is the grandest movement that has ever been launched in this country and we hope every parent will cooperate heartily. Encourage your boy or girl to take up some of the work recommended and give them a chance. Let them have a patch in the garden, or furnish them a few chickens to start with or something of the sort that appeals most to the child. They had better spend most of their time at that than to spend it all at play. It may be the very means of helping the boy to "find himself" and get started on a successful and useful career. —Contributed.

Not a word has been heard of Allen T. Fraser, who left here February 21 to finish some work at Beaverton, but went in to Portland to transact some business in Portland because the weather was bad. His wife has made every inquiry, but the police can give her no satisfaction. It is now thought that Fraser was put aboard some vessel, and that he will write as soon as port is reached. Fraser was industrious, not a hard drinking man, and was thoroughly reliable. There is the probability of foul play, but this is dismissed as not worth while entertaining.

H. W. Scott, of Forest Grove and Gaston, brought in a coyote pelt the last of the week and claimed his bounty. The coyote family is getting rather numerous around Washington County, the vandals evidently finding good picking down in the farm districts—better than up in the bunchgrass sections of Eastern Oregon.

His Angel

By SADIE OLCOTT

"Good morning, Della."
"Good morning, Margaret."
"I see you have a letter in your hand. I suppose it's for Howard?"
"It is."

"It's breaking your engagement with him, maybe?"
"No, it isn't. Why do you think that?"
"Can it be that you haven't heard what every one else knows?"
"What's that?"
"I supposed, of course, you knew it or I wouldn't have said anything."

"Heard what? For heaven's sake, stop this fooling and tell me what you're talking about!"
"Why, they say Howard is engaged to a girl in Asheville, where he lives."
"Who says it?"
"It's common talk."

There was silence for a few moments. Then Della said: "Yes, I know all about it. I am going to write Howard what I think of him."

She passed on, but instead of going directly to the post-office she went to her home by a roundabout course and, sitting at her writing desk, wrote Howard Benjamin a letter of a different kind entirely from the one she had intended to post.

In a couple of days Mr. Benjamin was announced. Della had had time to at least cool down and wished that she might have taken more time in the writing of the letter she had sent him. As she remembered it, her feelings had run away with her. She was surprised that Howard should have come to see her after having received it, but supposed he had come to return her letters and demand his own.

To her surprise Howard advanced to meet her as she entered the room with his customary smile, took her in his arms and kissed her. She blushed to think of the disagreeable things she had written him, wondering the while whether he had received her letter or whether there was any truth in the reports as to his inconstancy. She was much puzzled.

"I came down for the week end, sweetheart, to be with you," he said. "I couldn't stand to be separated from you any longer without one kiss." He gave her a dozen. "But how cold your hands are! Is there anything the matter with you?"

"Oh, no, I'm very well! I'm so glad you're come."
Della trembled lest this were preliminary to an announcement of his defection and his contempt for her on account of her complaint, just to make it more effective. But as her lover went on in the usual strain, interrupted only by an occasional kiss, she became gradually reassured as to the falsity of the reports that had reached her. But her letter—Howard must have come away just before its delivery. She dreaded to have him go back and get it. What would he think of her, he who had assured her time and again that she was an angel, better fitted for heaven than this wicked world?

Howard left his sweetheart thoroughly convinced of his constancy, but in terror at his returning to receive the imprecations she had written. Every time the postman left any mail she went to the delivery box with dread and grasped the letters with a trembling hand. It was several days before she received a missive from her lover, and when she did she was afraid to open it. She took it to her room, and, after taking it up and putting it down several times, she broke the seal.

It began by stating that to make up work left undone, to visit her, he had been busy day and night since his return. Then he went on to speak of those happy hours they had spent together and how he could count the days till he would see her again. Not a word about that horrible letter of hers. What could it mean? Had he received it, and was he too high minded, too generous, too magnanimous to take advantage of it, knowing that it had been written under a false impression?

In a few weeks he came again, and this time Della felt sure that he would speak of the subject that troubled her. She wished he would and have it over with. But he did not. He was just as affectionate and kind and loving as ever and evidently still considered her an angel.

Weeks passed and Della began to believe that her letter had miscarried. She inquired of the postman as to where undelivered letters were taken, and he told her they all were sent to the dead letter office in Washington. Letters misdirected or unclaimed or without stamps were to be found in the dead letter office. Della wrote there and received a card stating that the letter she had written about was there unstamped, and if she would send 2 cents it would be sent her.

When the letter came Della found that she had been so agitated that she had not written her address on it and had neglected to put a stamp on it. She began to read it; but, coming to that which now in her cooler moments she was ashamed of, she tore it into bits and threw the bits into the fire.

When Howard came again he noticed a change in his fiancée. The cloud that had been resting upon her had been lifted.

"My angel!" he said.
"Oh, please don't," she protested, burying her burning cheek on his bosom.
