MARRIED, DIVORCED, AND MARRIED AGAIN

Mrs. Rae Rogoway Tells her Troubles in Complaint in Court

HUSBAND WAS ONCE SENT TO PEN

Secured Divorce From Him, But Re-MARRIED as Soon as Out of Limbo

Mrs. Rae Rogoway has concluded that it is hard to reform a bad husband, and she has entered suit in Circuit court, asking for a decree of divorce from Oscar Rogoway. The twain were married in Portland in 1906, and while living in Portland in 1910, Rogoway was sent to the penitentiary for a felony committed in Multnomah County.

In December of that year Mrs. Rogoway secured a divorce, but, meeting Rogoway after he had served time, he told her he would reform and be a model husband. With this promise, and for the sake of the two little girls, she again married, this time in 1910, at Albany, Linn County.

The complaint alleges that after the second marriage he would remain away from home weeks at a time; that he would not provide the necessities of life; that he used profane language in the presence of the children, and that many times she was obliged to work out to sustain herself and little ones, as well as to take assistance from her mother.

She wants $40 per month permanent alimony, and the custody of the two little girls.

AUSTIN K. WATSON

Austin K. Watson died at the family home, at 195 East 36th Street, Portland, August 8, 1914, after suffering for some time with Bright's disease. He was aged 66 years, 4 months and 16 days. He leaves a wife, Laura I. Watson, and the following children: Clyde M., Elmer, Frank, Ina and Marie Watson and Mrs. Harry Smith, all of Portland, and Mrs. L. R. Coons, of Seattle. The funeral services were held at the Conservatory Chapel, Dunning's, East Sixth and Alder, Monday, August 10, interment being in the Mt. Scott cemetery.

Mr. Watson was a native of Missouri, and as a boy was well acquainted in both Boone and Audrain counties, that state.

He came to Oregon in the early day, and settled in Washington County, where he had a large circle of friends.

Mr. Watson was a loving husband and a kind and indulgent father, and he always took a great interest in his home life. For several years he was in the mercantile business, both at Mountandale and Glencoe, and he leaves a host of friends in North Washington County.

The Price Paid For a Wife

By EUNICE BLAKE

"Father," said Paul Alexandrovitch, "will you not buy Tatiana for me? We love each other. Tatiana is a serf, while I am free. I cannot marry her unless her master will sell her."

"I fear, my son," replied the father, "that the count will not sell Tatiana. I have never been on friendly terms with him, he being a rich landowner and I a small farmer. Besides, there was that trouble about the woodcutting. No, I do not believe he will grant any request of mine. But I will go to him and offer him a good price for the girl."

That was a time when a large proportion of the Russian people were serfs. Paul and Tatiana had played together as children when the little ones of other nations were at school, for education of the lower classes has never been permitted in Russia, and after they were old enough to work they continued the intimacy. And now that they had reached a marriageable age the fact of Tatiana's slavery loomed up a great barrier between them.

Alexander, Paul's father, counted up the money that he might spare to buy Tatiana and found by straining a point he could gather 1,000 rubles. He went to Count Korloff and very humbly told him of the affection between the boy and the girl and asking him if he would not make them happy by selling the latter so that they could be married. "I will give them a slice off my farm," he added, "and, as for the price, I will pay you 1,000 rubles."

"I cannot spare Tatiana," replied the count. "The countess needs her to dress her hair."

The refusal came so curtly that the father dared not pursue the matter. He went away and told his son the result of his mission. Paul was crushed by the news, for in Russia the autocratic system has prevailed for so many centuries that the weak—until the recent revolution—did not think of resisting the strong. Paul told Tatiana of the reason given for refusing to sell her, and she said that she had never dressed the countess' hair.

Paul had a great many friends, and Tatiana was also much beloved. All the world loves a lover, and their case excited a good deal of sympathy. A few of those who heard of the case clubbed together to add to the price that Alexander could raise to buy Tatiana, and one of them went to the count and asked him if he would not fix a price on the girl. He was a very avaricious man, and, thinking this might be an opportunity to get a good deal of money for what was not worth very much to him, he replied that if 5,000 rubles were offered he would accept them.

An effort was made to raise 4,000 rubles, which was the amount required in addition to what Alexander could give. But there is no great wealth in Russia except among those connected with the government, and the subscriptions came in such small sums that the amount finally subscribed was far below what was required.

The matter looked hopeless when Paul went one day to do some work for one Mourliensieff, a well to do man of the middle class. In talking with Paul he learned about his love affair and how he and Tatiana were made miserable by Count Korloff's meanness. Mourliensieff asked Paul how much was lacking altogether of the fund to buy Tatiana, and Paul said that it was 1,000 rubles ($800). Then Mourliensieff told Paul that he would lend him the money at the legal interest and he could pay off the loan in eight years, or 200 rubles a year.

Paul accepted the proposition gratefully and sent word to the count that he was ready to buy Tatiana, paying 5,000 rubles for her. Count Korloff was astonished that so much money could have been raised for such a purpose, and it occurred to him that, after so much had been got together, a little more might be added. He replied that he had found a new use for Tatiana that made her much more valuable, but, since he did not wish to stand between her and Paul Alexandrovitch, he would complete the bargain for 5,500 rubles.

Paul's disappointment was all he could bear. He went to Mourliensieff with tears in his eyes to tell him of the failure.

"It would be of no avail," said the latter, "to continue to follow such a man up the scale of his prices. Let the matter rest for awhile."

Paul took this to mean that he would never possess the girl he loved and went away sorrowful.

A few weeks after this when Paul was working in a field a messenger from Count Korloff came to him and said that the count had decided to accept 5,000 rubles for Tatiana. Paul replied that he did not know if the money would now be forthcoming, but he would make inquiries. He did so and succeeded in collecting the necessary amount. But just as he was about to start with it to the count a man rode up to the house where he was and scattered printed copies of a ukase of the czar. Paul read one of them and threw his cap in the air with a shout:

"The Little Father has freed the serfs!"

And so it was that Count Korloff received nothing for Tatiana. She was free to marry Paul, and no wedding among those people was celebrated with greater rejoicings than hers.
