It isn't often that divorce cases from Portland are of interest, but occasionally there is one that has its interesting side.
Mrs. Ethel Brandon has sued
Ralph Brandon for separation, and one of her complaints is that the husband objected to her visiting her mother, telling her that it cost more money for car fare it did for meat for the fam ily table. She says that he often awakened her in the early mornng hours and attempted to get her to promise that she wouldn't call on certain people for whom he had formed a dislike. The husband has asked that the case be dismissed.
