How an Aeronaut Was Captured

By MARTHA V. MONROE

Lieutenant Ben Harbeson of the United States aeroplane corps was called to the telephone.
"Hello?"
"Mr. Harbeson?"
"Yes, I'm Harbeson."

The colonel was laboring under a delusion that Harbeson had been at his quarters and was familiar with his family. The truth was that the lieutenant had never been at headquarters long enough to make their acquaintance...

There were two goodbyes and two receivers were hung up. Harbeson went away muttering to himself. He disliked to take any one up with him that he did not know and as to whose nerve he was ignorant...

Shortly before 3 o'clock Harbeson superintended the rolling of his machine from the sheds on to the level ground from which he proposed to make his start...

It was awfully good of you to take me up with you, Mr. Harbeson," she said.
"Take you up with me?" replied the lieutenant wondering.

Presently there came a gust of wind that turned the aeroplane on its beam. Harbeson paled, while Jack caught her breath. But the moment the machine righted itself she clapped her hands delightedly, exclaiming:

"Wasn't that just too lovely for anything! Do it again."
Harbeson, whose heart was beating like a kettledrum, made no reply that could be heard, though he remarked to himself that if ever there was a fool it was the girl beside him...

The weather was a trifle gusty when they started, and in the upper air they found it more so. After having been nearly capsized Harbeson started to return. He was caught in another gust so severe that Miss Jack was this time oddly made aware that she was being to be spilled from a thousand feet up in the air.

Both her fair arms went around the captain's neck.
"Isn't it nice?"
Harbeson was not yet an expert at driving an aeroplane and understood perfectly that any mismanagement on his part would cause a tragedy...

Boomerang Advice

By SARAH BAXTER

"Dearest," said George Harding the day after the return from his honeymoon as they were opening their accumulated mail at the breakfast table, "here's a letter from Charlie Webster. I wrote him while on our journey how transcendently happy I was."

"What do you mean by that?"
"I mean this: The first girl he met that he feels he'd like to marry let him show his admiration in his profession. If he has been introduced he may do this in one way; if not, in another. Should he meet her in the street or in company he should pursue her till he has learned who she is...

Now, George Harding's business led him to be much on the road. A few days after his return from the wedding journey he gave his wife a couple of dozen kisses and started on a trip. He had enjoyed her to go out whenever she had an opportunity, and since she was not only a devoted student, but an excellent driver, she attempted to kill loneliness by afternoon spins into the country...

Colors and Complexions.
Light blue makes blond complexions look ashen.
Dark blue sets off a blond complexion in high relief by supplying a suitable background.
Blue is unbecoming to a brunette unless her cheeks be florid. If she sellow it makes her face look tawny.

Identified.

In many parts of England and especially in the villages of the Black country it is quite a common thing for a man to be known so exclusively by a nickname that his real name is forgotten. A gentleman had occasion once to ask a potter for the whereabouts of a certain John Williams.

"John Williams?" repeated the man thoughtfully, knitting his brows. "I have heard tell of it. John Williams is a familiar. I say, sir," he explained, "as if asked by a sudden inspiration, 'so he be married?'"

"That's 'e," was the reply.
"An' hee three of a family?"
"I believe so."
"Well, sir, I'm John Williams."

"My dear," said a thin little Brighton man to his wife, "this paper says that there is a woman down in Devonshire who goes out and chops wood with her husband."

The actor was pleased with himself. "I feel," said he, "as if the mantle of Booth had fallen upon me."
His rival in the profession smiled a sardonic smile.
"I should think you would," said he, "for if it didn't break your back falling from that height, it would be a wonder."—Browning Magazine.

Teacher Was Fooled.
At a German recitation the class was asked for the German form of English words.
"Was is the German for lawyer, Tommy?" asked Miss Jones of my neighbor.
The German for lawyer is pronounced Ahf-to-kah. Although Tommy and I had studied this lesson with great zeal the night before, we could not recollect the word. So Tommy stammered very sulkily:

Poland was a great country for hard drinking in the old days. Its last king, Stanislaus II., was solemnly warned by the grand hetman, Branki, that he must never expect to become popular unless he got drunk at least twice a week. Pan Kelmirewski, who could empty a bucketful of champagne at a draft without noticeable consequences, once in company with Pan Solskowsky, high chamberlain of Volhynia, disposed of a whole butt of old Hungarian wine at a single sitting. One held his beaker under the lighthouse until it was full and then drank while the other filled his beaker, and so, turn and turn about, they achieved the feat.—London Chronicle.

St. Martin's in the Fields is probably the only London church that can boast of having had a king for church warden. George I. held that office for a number of years and marked his tenure of it by presenting the church with an organ. The greater part of Buckingham palace is situated within the parish of St. Martin's, and in consequence the births of all royal children born there are entered in the church register. Among celebrities who were buried at St. Martin's are Nell Gwynn, Robert Boyle, Sir John Ferguhar, Rou-billac, the sculptor, and Hunter, the surgeon. Hunter's remains were afterwards transferred to Westminster abbey.—London Globe.
