Wanted His Reward.

A clergyman, whose name is not nee emary to the chronicle, had invoked Mr. Choute's services in the settlement of a much involved and heavy estate He received his bill in due time. Mr. Choate, it may be remarked by way of parenthesis, did not become a millionaire and thus canble himself to accept an office whose annual expenses are $50,000 more than its emoluments by omitting to send bills to clients. The clergyman accordingly was not over-

But, though life's dearest Joy I miss.
There lies a nameless strength in this:
I will be worthy of it.

Reckless Generosity.
The late Rev. W. W. Freeman related a story illustrative of the way that a man's beart can swell and prompt him to great liberality under some extraordinary conditions. A big. raw boned, red headed young farmer entered his parlor one day, accompaned by a shy but comely girl, and desired him to perform the marriage ceremony. He did so, and when the fateful words were spoken that made the couple man and wife, the young husband drew from his pocket four bright silver quarter dollar pieces and, extending them toward the minister in his open paim, exclaimed, "There, Brother Freeman, just help yourself until you are satisfied." The minister took one.-Argonaut.

struct bridges across said ditch and town was the latest arrival at a select boarding school in Massachusetts. Being pretty and well dressed, she became very popular. She was elected to be an usher for fully shy, she was much wrought up over it. She never could do it—no, pever! But the election was positive: there was no drawing out. The evening found her a perfect flutter of pink frills, awaiting to receive the early comers. Each of the other young women who were acting in this capacity bore forward an imposing auditor, and Elsie found herself inquiring of a very old and elegant gentleman in a voice scarcely audible: "Sir, shall I show you to a seat?" "What? What? What?" demanded the nustere old fellow, holding his hand to his ear. "Sir," she screamed in a flustered voice, "shall I sew you to a sheet?"-Harper's Magazine.

The "Spell" of Mrs. Langtry. The Jersey Lily once neatly scored at the expense of George Bernard Shaw, who was then much talked about in London and who was regarded by most folk as the incarnation of audacious egotism. He was commenting on the limitations put upon him in his newspaper articles, among which were characteristic criticisms in the lines of music and drama. He declared that such was the censorship over him by his editors that he really had no freedom to express his opinions in the English press, and it was to Mrs. Langtry that he said: "I shall publish a magazine some of these days, in which I shall print my opinions on all the topics of the day. I have enough of them to spare. On art, literature, philosophy, music, the drama, socialism, religion and every other subject this magazine shall reflect Shaw. I shall write every line of it too. The experiment may be futile. but the first step shall surely be taken." "What shall you call your magazine?" Mrs. Langtry inquired. "I'll give it a concise and appropriate title by naming it after myself." "Ah!" sweetly spoke the Lily. "And how shall you spell it?"-Detroit Free

A High Calling. Tommy was eighteen, and only the recording angel knew what was the age of Aunt Katy, but the little old colored woman and the college fisherman were each getting their first taste of New York life that winter. One effect on Tommy was to make him want

"Now, what do you think of Tommy's wanting a silk hat, Aunt Katy?" exclaimed Tommy's mother, who was having a hard time adjusting herself to having for a son a young man instead of just a boy. "What he want wid a silk hat? He nin't no preacher."

"But, Aunt Katy, other people be-sides preachers wear silk hats. Haven't you noticed the men in silk hats on the streets? Every other man you meet has one on on Sunday."
