The Salient Column

The Arabic, carrying munitions for the Allies, was torpedoed by the Germans, the other day, and sent to the bottom. It is said that the vessel carried a large shipment of gold to the United States—but as it was for advance payment for more war supplies and sellers in the United States suffer no loss. The incident does not appear to have thrown Washington into a panic.

Brother McAadoo says he will loan the South some of Uncle Sam's money to take care of the cotton crop. Perhaps Uncle Sam could be prevailed upon to practice the same policy with some of our timber people in the Northwest.

And now the ministers are taking a fall out of Billy Sunday—one prominent clergyman saying that Billy's Saviour is not the regular orthodox Saviour. And Billy goes right along making his meetings pay.

Theodore Roosevelt is now seeing the ten men at "Kendall Green," and he is out for fight, whether or no. As he is voicing the same sentiment as the big press which fought him in 1912, it may be possible that they will give him hearty support for the presidential honors. We shall see "what we shall see."

Boomerang Advice

By SARAH BANTER

"Dearest," said George Harding the day after the return from their honeymoon as they were opening their accumulated mail at the breakfast table, "here's a letter from Charlie Webster. I wrote him while on our journey how transcendently happy I was."

"You didn't leave me out, did you, lovey?"

"Oh, certainly not. Charlie writes that he is envious of me and wishes I would tell him how I got you. He says he has been waiting for several years for some nice girl to show a preference for him, but thus far there's nothing doing."

"Nothing doing? I should think not. Does he suppose a girl is going to make love to him while he sits nodding? When you write him again tell him that he must have decision, concentration."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I mean this: The first girl he sees that he feels he'd like to marry let him show his admiration in his expression. If he has been introduced he may do this in one way; if not, in another. Should he meet her in the street or in company he should pursue her till he has learned who she is, then never let up till he has made her acquaintance. We women like to be hunted. It gratifies our pride."

Now, George Harding's business led him to be much on the road. A few days after his return from the wedding journey he gave his wife a couple of dozen kisses and started on a trip. He had enjoined her to go out when ever she had an opportunity, and since she was not only a devoted autoist, but an excellent driver, she attempted to kill loneliness by afternoon spins into the country. On one of these spins her machine stopped in the middle of the road and, like a balky mule, would go no further.

The first auto that came along was driven by a gentleman, who pulled up, lifted his cap and asked if he could be of service. Mrs. Harding was a very pretty woman, and the troubled look that appeared in her liquid eyes was enough to soften a heart of brick. The gentleman's eyes expressed admiration in a marked degree. He left his car by the side of the road and proceeded to make an investigation of the lady's vehicle. Finding that the trouble would compel its removal by outside power, he proposed to secure a rope and pull it to a garage. Anything he suggested was acceptable, and after a hunt for a stout rope in the houses along the road the attachment was made and the journey commenced, the man driving his car the lady at the wheel of hers. Reaching a garage, her car was left there and the gentleman begged permission to drive her home.

Mrs. Harding had received admiration in her day, but never anything so suddenly developed as this. It was plain to her that her new found admirer was taking her home by a round about way, the necessity for which he attributed to the roads. After an hour's drive that could have been done in ten minutes they pulled up at the Harding residence, the stranger helped the lady out, and, after thanking him for his kindness, she ran up the steps.

The next afternoon what was her surprise on looking out a front window to see her car stop at her door, driven by the gentleman who had rescued her at the wheel. He sprang out, came up to the house and rang the bell. She opened the door herself and received the announcement from her admirer's lips that, fearing she might wish for her car, he had brought it home to her.

In recognition of so much kindness what could she do but ask him in? He gladly accepted the invitation and, seated tete-a-tete with her, spent an hour in bliss for himself and in relieving ennui for the lady. Though recent ly married, she had not yet got used to turning away the devotion of another man than her husband. When her visitor departed his eyes expressed such a longing to be permitted to call again that Mrs. Harding could not refrain from giving it.

When George Harding returned from his trip his wife casually mentioned her automobile mishap, but, fearing to excite his jealousy, refrained from entering into particulars. Charlie Webster informed his friend that during his absence he (Charlie) had put in practice Mrs. Harding's advice and had profited by it. Indeed, he was plucking up courage to offer his love to a lady and ask her to be his wife. The proposition might seem sudden, and he expected to be refused, but he would act on Mrs. Harding's advice and stick to it.

A few evenings after this George Harding left his wife for a short time. When he returned what was his surprise to see his old friend, Charlie Webster, sitting in the drawing room with Mrs. Harding. She appeared to be a bit rattled, and the two men looked at each other in astonishment.

"This is the gentleman," said the wife, "who was so kind to me when my car broke down."

There was an embarrassed silence for a few moments, when Harding said:

"And you, Charlie, have found a lady to your taste. I wish you success." And, with flashing eyes, he turned on his heel and went upstairs.

There was a triangular soreness over the matter for some time, but eventually Webster was excused since he had acted upon the advice of Harding.

Miss Esther Heim, of Portland, was the guest of Misses Zola and Viola Welch, this week.

Miss Lela Stewart, of Dille, visited with Miss Ona Ford, the first of the week.

J. E. Butler, wife and son, of Portland, were guests of Mrs. Polly Butler, the last of the week.

Bruce A. Gordon, who had charge of the Rockalite work here, is now superintending the placing of the steel in a big bridge at Cleveland, Ohio, the structure being 2970 feet long, with a span of 591 feet. He says he would like to come out and catch a string of trout in old Dairy. Incidentally he sends his regards to the Hillsboro Pythians, the friends of yore, and to Dad Bert Luther.

Mrs. H. W. Stauffer returned this week from a seven weeks' visit at various California points, and while South visited at San Diego with Mrs. Eugene Wells, and other former Hillsboro friends. She also crossed the line into old Mexico; stopped at Los Angeles, Pasadena, Oakland and San Francisco. She met many Hillsboro people at all points South, making the trip a very pleasant one.

Hillsboro people might be interested to know that Miss Jennie Tibury, daughter of C. Tibury and wife, formerly of this city, was united in marriage to Leonard Fink, a prominent business man of McMinnville. The bride and groom are touring California by auto, as their honeymoon.

A. G. Gilmore has returned from San Francisco.
