SCHOLLS GRANGE FAIR

The date set for the Scholls Grange Fair is October 15th and 16th. The committee in charge are planning for a big fair, with several unique attractions added to those of previous fairs. There will be a stock show and all lovers of good stock are kindly requested to begin thinking about which animals and how many they wish to exhibit. There will be the usual fine display of fruits, veget-ables, grains, grasses, canned goods and fancy ve-dicware.

Entries for exhibit are open to each and every one in the com-munity. For further particulars address or phone to Lester R Campbell, Hillsboro, Or., Route 2, or E. G. Heaton, Laurel, Ore.

John Ditchburn, a Portland attorney, was in the city yester-day, in circuit court. John is the pink of temperance and never indulges in the cup that cheers—and yet he has over a gallon of whiskey in his house that has some age. It was taken off the Steamer Great Republic, when it foundered at the mouth of the Columbia River. It should by this time have some bubble, moonshine, zephyrs, Summer sunshine and joy. John says he is keeping it just for a relic, or for fear a rattlesnake might get into his garden some day and an antidote might be valuable.

Recorder J. H. Davis, Deputy W. F. Boley and John Ryan went out to the East Fork of Dairy Creek, Sunday and Monday, to try their luck in a venison hunt, but returned empty handed. They will try it again some of these days. Davis says he could hear them in the brush but couldn't get a shot. A fawn came into their camp one day and Davis had quite a time keep-ing Boley from violating the law.

R. O. Stevenson, of Gales Creek, came down Tuesday, and spent the forenoon greeting his county seat friends. R. O. says that the Gales Creek Valley had more campers this season than any Summer since he has lived up that way.

Mrs. Fred Braun, an aged woman of Newton, was stricken with paralysis ten days ago, and died Tuesday morning. Her aged husband survives her, and the old gentleman, who is not very strong, is griefstricken over the loss.

J. S. Robinson, of near Farmington, was in town Tuesday. Joe says this has been one of the finest years for harvest that he has seen in his fifty or more years in Oregon.

Dr. W. B. Hare and wife and Mrs. J. C. Hare, of Portland, are spending a week at the Hare Ranch, near Minter Bridge.

For Sale—Eight full-blooded White Minorca hens. Fine lay-ers.—Willard Tupper, Hillsboro.

L. L. Crawford, of Manning, was in the city yesterday morn-ing.

A Burglary

By EDITH V. ROSS

Gladys Denton was the daughter of an English couple who were related to members of the nobility and had lived in affluence. Speculation on the Stock Exchange took all they possessed ex-cept enough to get them to America, where her father made an uncertain living. It was a dream with him to get back to England and with sufficient means to resume his former position.

When the family came to America Gladys was but four years old. Con-sequently while the father and moth-er were living on the memory of their former social position the daughter was growing to womanhood without the advantages of wealth. She was not only comely, but a lovely girl, and when her father had passed an age wherein he could hope to make a strike he fancied that his daughter might obtain a station nearer to what her birth entitled her by an advan-tageous marriage.

This being the case, it was quite nat-ural that every young man who came to visit Gladys was looked upon with minglings by her parents. The halcyon days of the family in England were a blank to her. That her mother had employed half a dozen servants and had ridden in her carriage was, as far as she was concerned, ancient his-tory.

Gladys' young men friends were un-tilled Americans and quite good enough for her. Naturally, therefore, she chafed at being catechined by her mother whenever she made a new ac-quaintance or an old one called on her more than once a month.

When Gladys fell in love it was one of those quick cases wherein a girl will recognize a mate the moment she sees him. And it was the same with the man she met. They could have been married the next day and made no mis-take. Gladys knew very well that they could not appear together before her father and mother without betraying the position they occupied as lovers. She therefore did not permit her lover to come to the house. The only man the parents had reason to dread, Alan Edmonds, they never saw.

But lovers cannot live simply as lov-ers; they must possess each other. Gladys, knowing that for her to con-fess that she had met and loved a man with nothing but a salary barely suf-ficient to enable a couple to get on would bring the dreams of years crash-ing about her parents' heads, would neither consent to marry Edmonds openly nor clandestinely. At any rate, this was the case when something hap-pened to make matters far worse than they were. The couple corre-sponded clandestinely, and one evening while Gladys was inditing an impas-sioned letter to her lover a lamp on the floor below exploded and started a fire. She ran downstairs and assisted in put-ting it out. But before she got back to her room her mother, who had been collecting heirlooms, expecting that they would need to be removed, had been in Gladys' room and pounced upon the letter. The secret was out. But "what's his name or where's his home" Gladys didn't care to tell. Both her father and her mother threatened and pleaded with her to give them sat-isfaction in the matter, but she held firm.

Then followed meetings and commu-nications made difficult by the watch-fulness of Mrs. Denton, and the great-ness of the obstacles the more impassioned the love; the more impassioned the love, the greater the risks taken. Finally Gladys wrote her lover that she was to be removed.

The necessity of seeing her at once induced him to go to her home the same evening, hoping to find an oppor-tunity to speak to her. He waited in the yard till every room in the house except Gladys' was dark, then, climb-ing a support of the porch, appeared before her window. She had not dis-robbed. Tapping on the pane, he called to her to see with him.

While they were talking they heard the front door open and close. Ed-monds, fearing to be caught by some one without, entered the room from the window. He had scarcely done so when a step was heard in the hall. Gladys ran into a closet. The door was opened by her mother, and there stood an unknown man.

If Gladys lost her head her lover kept his. Her watch was on the dress-er, and just as the door opened he clutched it. Then, darting out of the window, he made off. Gladys heard his retreat and came from her hiding place, pale and trembling.

"My child," exclaimed her mother, "there is nothing to fear! The wretch has gone, but he has taken your watch."

"Oh, mother," exclaimed the girl, "I'm so frightened."

"The police were called and came in a patrol wagon, but the bird had flown, and there was nothing more to do in the matter."

One morning a few months later an-other bird was discovered to have flown during the night. Gladys was washing, and during the day a tele-gram came announcing that she had been married. This time there was nothing to do but make the best of it, and the young couple were forgotten and recalled.

"It seems to me," said Mrs. Denton, scrutinizing her son-in-law, "that I have seen you somewhere before."

"Impossible," said the groom. "You mistake me for another."

And the secret never came out.
