Bruce F. Purdy, of Forest Grove, was in the city Saturday. He and his sons, Cliff and Bruce Jr., have 230 acres of land in the Imperial Valley, back of San Diego, and it is in one of the most fertile of the Southern irrigated districts. They paid $10 an acre for it seven or eight years ago, and it is now worth $150 to $300 per acre. By Nov. 1 they will have harvested three crops off the holdings, and it will raise anything that can be produced anywhere. They had in 120 acres of Kaffir corn this year, besides a lot of alfalfa. A town has sprung up within a mile of their holdings and eventually their property will have an almost fabulous value.

OLD TIME HILLSBOROITE VISITS CITY OF BIRTH

Was Born on Present Site of Hotel Washington, Main and Third
LEFT HERE THIRTY YEARS AGO
Says There Was Not a Brick Structure in Town When He Departed

Frank L. Hay, General Superintendent of the Pullman service for the Great Northern Railway and Steamship lines, arrived here Monday from St. Paul, and visited relatives at Cornelius and Orenco, the Schofields and the Frank Imbries. Mr. Hay was born on the present site of the Hotel Washington, and was educated in the Hillsboro schools. He says he left here thirty years ago and when he departed there was not a brick building in the city of Hillsboro—nor even a plank street. The old court house—now standing opposite the Hotel Tualatin, was then the county capital, and the people here thought it was some structure.

Mr. Hay first went into the railway service east of the mountains, and later drifted East, where he went to work for the Pennsylvania. After several years there he was given the position of assistant to the superintendent of the Pullman service, and from there was given the superintendency of the Canadian Pacific. Later he returned to the U. S. and took his present position. He says that the Great Northern has been doing a splendid business on its lines in connection with the steamship service, the Northern Pacific and Great Northern. He left for San Francisco, Tuesday evening, after visiting with his brother, Ben Hay in Astoria. This is his first visit to Hillsboro since he left.

John Booker Sr. is visiting his son, Antone, at Merced, Southern California, and was there Sunday, on the father's birthday. While South Mr. Booker will make a visit with E. J. Lyons, at Turlock.

Kingsley Lytle, who is working with the city engineer at McMinnville, spent Sunday at the Lytle home. McMinnville is settling in an extension of its lines.

Wheat was up to 88 cents delivered at Hillsboro, one day last week, but prices fell by the latter part of the week's business. Many took advantage of the rise, but the fellow with an eye for better values held on. Many think that wheat will yet go to a dollar before the first of the year.

F. W. Phillips, who returned the other day from Cottonwood, Idaho, says that crops are fine up there. While in Idaho he met Jos. L. Meek, well known here, and also an old Washington County school teacher, who attended P. U. when the late Congressman Tongue was a student. This man taught school at Cornelius, on the Phillips place in 1871.

Ed Olson, who has been up on Valdez Creek, Alaska, all Summer, working on a placer claim, hydraulic mining, returned Saturday evening from the North. He expects to remain here until about the first of the year, when he will return to Valdez and help put in equipment for another year's run.

MRS. SCOTT DUNIWAY

Mrs. Abigail Scott Duniway, woman suffragist, writer and platform lecturer, died at her Portland home, early Monday morning, after several weeks of illness. She was a sister of the late Harvey W. Scott, of the Oregonian, and was well known to many Washington County pioneers. Many years ago Mrs. Duniway was prominent as a representative of Oregon women and her brilliant intellect made her a marked woman. She crossed the plains in 1852—then a young woman—and was in the same wagon train with the late Kenyon Crandall, of Hillsboro.

Of Mrs. Duniway's family of six children, her only daughter, Mrs. Clara Duniway Stearns, died in January, 1896. Her husband, Ben C. Duniway, died in August, 1898. Of her five sons, Hubert R. Duniway is a wholesale lumber dealer in New York City; Willis S. Duniway, former State Printer, died in August, 1913; Wilkie C. Duniway is identified with the mechanical department of The Oregonian; Clyde A. Duniway is president of the State University of Montana, and Ralph R. Duniway is a prominent attorney of Portland.
