"breakfasts" was prized by many persons almost as much as a royal command, more by some. Mr. Whistier brought together about his delaty, long, narrow breakfast table in its long,
narrow room with pale peliow washest walls a symposium of those persons in London most noted for wit or endowed with rare original talent of some kind.
Sprinkled here and there for the sake, no doubt, of half tones were others whose chief qualification was the power of chasteness and judicious appreciation.

These symposiums were held by Whistier in his spiendid studio, 33 Tite Whistier in his spiendid studio, 33 Tite street, at present the studio of Rargent. Whistier did not steadily occupy that place, which a depleted treasury sometimes caused him to formate temporarily. According to the widely known story, when the balliffs came in to disposess him for dobt he presed them into service as extra men to help serve one of his famous breakfasts, after which he would retire to a low, rambling workshop up an allegant of the bling workshop up an alleyway off the Fulham road. There in solitary quiet he would bring forth another masterpiece to startle the world and furnish him with the means of re-entering beautiful Tite street and taking up the thread of his more princely existence.

The Brahman's Funeral Pyre and t

Coromony of Burning. After the body of a Brahman been anointed with senamum oil the big toes are bound together and the two thumbs. It is then lashed to a littwo thumbs. It is then inshed to a lit-ter made of two long parallel poles, to which are fustened seven transverse pieces of wood. The shroad is very simple, a large piece of cloth wrapped round the body and bound with ropes of straw. If the dead Brahman leaves a will his face is not covered; other-wise the shroad is brought up over the

The burning ground, or ghat, is usually near a river that those who have taken part in the ceremonies may purify themselves as quickly and as easily as possible. Refore erecting the funeral pyre a shallow pit is dug and partially filled with dry wood; the body is covered with splinters of dry wood and sprinkled with panchagaria, an infammable tiquid, and placed on the pyre and covered with branches and roots, like a but.

The nearest relative or heir then takes a lighted taper and sets fire to the four corners of the pile and leaves at once to perform the cereinous of purification. The carriers, being of the lowest caste, remain until the body is entirely consumed.—Westminster Ga-
