BEAVERTON FRUIT GROWER RESPONDS

Upon Request Sends Letters to Argus Telling of How and When to Spray

HAS CLEANEST ORCHARD IN VALLEY

Lessons Learned From Practical Experience in Care of Trees

In response to a request from the Argus, B. Leis sends the following letter on orchard care: "Books on orchard care are sometimes misleading, but this information is from actual experience. All know the kind of apples I have raised wherever I exhibited, and first premiums have been awarded me against world-renowned apple growing districts. Our former Fruit Inspector Atwell says 'You have the cleanest orchard in the Willamette Valley.' What I have done all can do who will follow these directions. I will begin with the worst form of anthracnose, which is the worst that an orchard man has to contend against. In the Fall after the leaves have fallen I use one part of Lime and Sulphur Solution to 8 parts of water, and again in the Spring when the buds are swelling I repeat the same dose. If no anthracnose is apparent I use the solution 1 to 10. I have reference to the Aetna Brand of lime and sulphur, as I know how it is made and know its ingredients, and will guarantee it to do the work. This is the house cleaning spraying. Now whatever is done do not be in too much haste to get through, but soak every part of the tree and every limb and branch, for if you miss some parts your spraying will not have the proper effect. The San Jose scale multiplies rapidly, one female producing five million of the young in a season. What would 100 females do if left? The next spraying is for scale. You have noticed the black spots that make the apple so unsightly—practically unsalable. For this I use one 1 gal. of lime and sulphur to 25 parts of water. Spray when the cluster opens and the blossoms show pink, or rather when they are in a ball, but not open. This is the first scale spraying. The next is when the petals have fallen. Now be sure they are off the trees. If you spray before they fall it will do but little good, and you will kill every bee that ventures on the blossoms. Besides the stamen will not be sufficiently withered to allow the poison to enter the calyx cup. Use a Boreaux nozzle as it will penetrate farther. The nozzle should be turned downward instead of upward. Then comes the principal spraying for the codling moth and if you omit this you may as well omit all others. For this I use 2 1/2 to 3 lbs. Grasselli brand of arsenate of lead adding about 14 gals. of lime and sulphur solution to 50 gals. of water. The next spraying will be about the 20th of June if weather is favorable. Use the same amount of arsenate of lead, lime and sulphur, about 35 of water to 1 of lime and sulphur. The last spraying will be about the 20th of August, for the second brood of codling, using the same dose as for the second spraying. You may omit the lime and sulphur if there is no Fall scab. Now if these directions are followed closely I will guarantee you will have good, clean fruit—and you will be proud of it. In conclusion, don't spray in rainy weather as it will not adhere to the tree or foliage. The above comes from 25 years of orchard experience. More could be said, but this covers the ground."

Dead Easy

By DONALD CHAMBERLIN

We lived in a house situated on a park. I used to walk in the park a good deal and when the weather admitted often sat reading on a bench located near the park walk. A row of houses backed up against the other side of the wall, and one morning I saw a pretty girl sitting at a second story window doing some fancy work. The situation suggested flirtation; but, though I kept my eye on the girl without cessation, I could not detect from her actions that she was conscious of my presence. When I had remained on the bench so long that I felt to remain longer would seem as if I were watching her I withdrew. I was telling my sister Kate about my observation and regretting that I could not win a single glance from my beauty. "How do you know you didn't?" asked Kate. "How do I know? Why, she kept her eyes on her work all the while." "Humph! I once sat in a window and kept my eyes fixed on a young man in a window opposite without his knowing it." "How did you do it?" "By a mirror." "You don't mean it! Is that the way girls do?" "When they want to." "I don't believe this girl wants to." "I'll go with you some time, and if I can get a look at her I'll let you know whether her indifference is assumed or not." Kate went with me, and luckily the girl was sitting at the window. The latter did not scruple to look down upon us quite frequently. "She seems to be more interested in you," I said, "than she is in me." "No; she's interested in you. When you were alone she would not appear to notice you. Now that I am here she is making up for lost time." "The dickens you say! You must come here with me every day." "Indeed, I will not. If you haven't the courage to manage the affair yourself you'll have to let it drop." "What shall I do next?" Kate thought a moment, then told me to send a box of cut flowers anonymously. I had sufficient courage for that, for the girl would have no reason, so I supposed, to think that I had sent the gift, so I acted on Kate's advice. The next morning, armed with magazines and newspapers, I took my seat on the bench. In a vase on a mantel in the room occupied by my charmer were the flowers. I waited for her to appear at the window, but she did not, and I went home. "Nothing gained by the flowers," I said to Kate. "They're on her mantel, but she did not come to the window, and I fancy she has a lover whom she suspected of having sent them." Kate laughed and said she would go out to the bench and have a look at them. When she returned she said: "Dek, you're a fool." "Why do you say that?" I asked hopefully. "She has put the flowers in the only place in the room where they could be seen from the bench." I was delighted. Why had I not noticed that? "What shall I do next?" I asked. "Well, you might write a message and hold it so that she can read it without appearing to mean it for her." "She couldn't read letters less than two or three inches high at that distance." "Make them as large as you like. But she can use a glass." "You don't mean that this girl would descend to that with a man she has never met?" "She's not so nice but that she will do any spying that will not be found out. Of course you must sit with your back to her, else she can't see the message." "I see. What message shall I write?" "The words 'May I call?'" "Good gracious! Without an introduction?" "Leave that to her. However, you had better write your name and address." I wrote the message in charcoal and held it up with my back to the window. By this time I had learned some points myself and held a pocket mirror so that I could see the window. Before long I saw the girl leveling a pair of opera glasses at me. With my tiny mirror, not more than an inch in diameter, I could see her straining to decipher my message. To my delight it took her some time to do so. "It's all right," I said to Kate when I got home, and I told her what had occurred, adding that I should take my field glasses with me the next day to read the answer. "You'll not get an answer in that way," said Kate. "Because it wouldn't be ladylike." "How will I get it?" "I don't know." A few days later a girl told Kate that a friend of hers wished to know her. Kate assented to an introduction. The girl who wished to make the acquaintance was the girl at the window. "Eureka!" I cried, dancing around the room. "And she asked you to bring me to call on her?" "She did no such thing. She was not so bold. I asked her to come and see me. When she does the rest will be easy." The rest was as easy as falling off a greased log.
