

HAY HARVEST STARTS IN TUALATIN VALLEY

Farmers Busy Cutting and Putting in Clover Hay

CROP IS FAIR DESPITE CONDITIONS

Start is Made Several Days Earlier Than Usual This Year

Hundreds of farmers in Washington County started clover hay harvest last week, and thousands of acres were being cured by the last of the week. The start this season was made several days earlier than usual, owing to the rapid growth caused by the moist weather so late in the spring.

The crop this year, in acreage, is not as heavy as usual, but the yield is fairly good.

Many dairymen say that clover should be cut sooner than the custom prevailing, as it gives a better food value when harvested a little green. There are others, though, who claim this is a mistake.

As a rule cutting generally begins from June 15 to 20, and the harvest gets a little sprinkle of rain. This year there is a vast acreage already in the barns, and if the rains get any of the crop it will be a negligible quantity. This early cut will mean a big harvest of clover seed this fall.

Crop conditions are looking a great deal better since the few warm days arrived, and grain has taken on a color and growth that means something.

TWENTY YEARS AGO

(From The Argus)

Michael Wren, pioneer, of Centerville, was badly gored by a bull the last of the week. Only for the fact that his premiership had been doctored Mr. Wren would have been killed.

Two young men from Astoria were in the city the first of the week, enroute to Forest Grove. They report that Astoria is paralyzed by the fishermen's strike, and that business has gone into hiding.

J. A. Filppin, pioneer of 1845, was down from his Buxton ranch the first of the week. Filppin was one of a party of four to leave Hinesboro for the West—the first to start for the Pacific slope.

A. W. Furdin and Myrtle Banks, of near Greenville, were married this week.

John Masters has two acres of strawberries, and has sold nearly all his crop at 11 cents per pound in Portland.

The local market sells three boxes of strawberries for a quarter.

Adam Beil, of Forest Grove, has purchased the Buford blacksmith shop at Centerville, and will take possession the first of the month.

The official count in the first Congressional district gives Thos. H. Tongue 19,356 and Vanderbilt 19,282, thus giving Mr. Tongue the election to Congress by 74. The election was in doubt for several days and when the news came assuring Tongue the seat at Washington there was a big jubilee in Hillsboro. Mr. Tongue's home since boyhood. Last Saturday night there was a big ratification by the republicans and Mr. Tongue made a short address in the court house. There was a big parade, and the Congressman-elect was the recipient of a magnificent floral tribute by the ladies of Hillsboro.

OREGON OPTOMETRISTS

Hillsboro was honored last week when L. M. Hoyt, jeweler and optician, was elected president of the State Association of Registered Optometrists. Dr. C. W. Lowe, of Portland, a regular visitor to Hillsboro for a quarter
