The Argus will wager that the Oregon boys will give a good account of themselves in France—they always have made good.

It has been many years since France earned the gratitude of Uncle Sam by helping him to get liberty. It is now Uncle's turn, and he is not niggardly.

Washington County was the first to report a man killed as the result of the open season for deer. We are bound to get on the map, somehow, but it means sorrow to someone. It was peculiar that both the dead man and he who accidentally did the killing, are oldtime hunters.

Just now the man who recently enlisted with General Cupid, and later successfully passed the war board physician as a fit fellow for a fight, is on the anxious seat. After all, an interrupted honeymoon isn't a darned pleasant affair—unless you happen to be along about the age of Brother Hurley, of the News Times, or the Argus reporter.

ONCE A WIDE CANAL

Broad Street, New York, Where the Curb Brokers Now Operate.

The curb brokers of New York, who now operate on Broad street, would have been forced to conduct their business from gondolas or canalboats had they made use of that thoroughfare in early days, for where solid pavement now stands there was a wide canal.

Many people nowadays, wandering through the narrow streets of lower Manhattan, have wondered at Broad street's unusual width. Still more peculiar was such breadth of thoroughfare in the olden times, when streets were nearly all narrow, and to distinguish it from the alley-like byways that surrounded it the thoroughfare was referred to as "the broad street." The Dutch called it the "Heere Gracht" (The latter word had a far different meaning in those days). It was not at first a street, but the principal canal of the city. This canal, wide enough for heavy boats to pass each other, ran into Broad street at the southern end and continued north almost to Wall street. A similar but smaller canal ran through Beaver street.

Peter Stuyvesant in 1657 had the canal's sides planted, and a few decades later the waters were gradually replaced by a street.

As that street perforce followed the canal's former lines, it was much the widest thoroughfare in all lower Manhattan and well merited its name of Broad street.

The "Cork Convent."

A striking curiosity near Cintra, Portugal, is an ancient convent built partially in the interior of an immense rock. The convent is situated in a very isolated spot and was formerly surrounded by a dense wood of cork trees. The convent is known as the Convento da Cortia, or "Cork convent," for the reason that the monks' cells, chapel, kitchen and refectory are all lined with cork to keep out the damp. From 1599 to 1834 the convent was inhabited by an order of monks known as the Capuchins, a remarkable feature of their discipline being that, except on certain occasions, silence was obligatory. Since 1834, when the monasteries and convents of Portugal were dissolved, the convent has not been occupied, though it is open to the public, a caretaker residing there for this purpose.—Wide World.

Princes In England.

Only the eldest son of the king of England has a legal right to the title of prince, although other royal children have many privileges. They are sons and daughters of England, they are royal highnesses in their own right, and they could claim to be served on one knee at table when the king is not present. Moreover, in England princes are always of royal blood. In other countries they are often mere nobles, ranking after dukes.—London Standard.

Fables in the Bible.

Of the fables as distinguished from the parable there are but two examples in the Bible. The first of these is that of the trees choosing their king (Judges ix, 8-15); the second that of the cedar of Lebanon and the thistle (II Kings xiv, 9).

Fetters.

The use of fetters goes back to ancient times. Fetters were usually made of brass and also in pairs, the word being in the dual number. Iron was occasionally employed for the purpose.

WRITING THAT FADES.

Result of the Action of Light and Air Upon the Ink.

Attention was first called to the bleaching effect of air and light on writing ink as used in modern times by the fact that signatures on certain certificates had become illegible through the fading of the ink, says a writer in the Journal of the Society of Chemical Industry.

As it was impracticable to test a sample of ink by exposure of writing for a period of years, it was considered that a limited application of hydrogen peroxide would be the nearest chemical equivalent to the bleaching effect of the atmosphere. Writing done by different inks was exposed to light, the paper being occasionally moistened with a 2 per cent solution of hydrogen peroxide, the result being that the handwriting gradually became invisible, in some cases more quickly than in others. The violet ink used for typewriters was less readily acted on, but was quickly bleached by sulphurous acid.

If an ink could be produced possessing the desirable properties of perfect fluidity and being nonoxidizing and at the same time incapable of being decolorized by oxidizing or reducing agents, there would be good reason to believe that the writing done by such an ink would be practically permanent. In the meantime, when writing is of an important nature and is desired to endure, some form of carbon ink appears to be the only trustworthy preparation.

Even More Terrible.

"In Morocco men bid for their wives. Just think of being put on the auction block and having men bid for you! It must be terrible."

"Must be," assented the other girl. "And just suppose there were no bids?"—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Harmonious Effects.

"Don't you think some of the comic pictures are out of all proportion?" "Not at all," replied Miss Cayenne. "Only people who look as they do could possibly make the remarks attributed to them."—Washington Star.

The Next Step.

"It is only a step from life to death," remarked the invalid father. "Yes, and a step further afterward," replied the precocious child.—Town Topics.
