Well, well, as the late D. M. C. would say, "this is the kind of weather that is good climate."

The government took the cat out of wheat long enough to get a supply ahead, anyway.

The war lord of Germany, having shown how little he cares for a "scrap of paper," will now find out how little the allies will believe in any paper to which his signature is attached. Therefore he might just as well get ready to hand over his firearms and his fireboats.

President Wilson notifies the central powers, thro a note to the Swiss representative, that before he will give the Kaiser any assistance we should know just what they propose, and he also tells them that peace will be considered when they get off of soil which does not belong to them. Meantime the big guns keep shooting and big yardage is being gained by the allies on every front. Every peace bird sent out so far has lost its tail feathers.

When a maniac turns loose with guns and knives and attacks an entire community it does not as a rule let the one running amuck dictate the peace terms. When he is disarmed entirely—bound and gagged—then the community will do the peace talking and name the peace terms. And here is just where the Kaiser mistakes the temper of the world by his not recognizing he is in the outlaw class. The Kaiser talking peace is like the convicted prisoner asking the court—"Can't we arbitrate this matter?"
