

COLONEL HAYNES FARM BOT BY WM. BEHRMAN

Will Make place Into Breeding Farm for Registered Jerseys

TAKES POSSESSION OCT. 1

Has Some Fine Stock and Adds Some More St. Mawes Jerseys

Wm. Behrman Jr., of Cornelius, former owner of the Harrington place at Shefflin, now owned by Kirkman, has bought the Col. Haynes place at Haynes Station, near Forest Grove, and will convert the place into a breeding farm for registered Jersey cattle. The ranch contains 165 acres and is on the Oregon Electric. Mr. Behrman already has some registered Jersey cattle, one of which is a bull from the C. I. Hood farm, at Lowell, Mass. To this he recently added a two year old registered Jersey heifer, giving over 40 lbs. of milk with her first calf for which he paid $700; has a test better than 5 1/2 per cent; a yearling registered Jersey for $400; another yearling for $350, and still another two year old for which he paid $500.

These youngsters are out of Golden St. Mawes' Poppy, a fall brother of the Geo. Biersdorf bull, and with the sire owned by Mr. Behrman he expects to have one of the best herds on the Pacific Coast within a few years. He will build a model stock breeding and dairy barn on the farm, and expects to have it excelled by none in this section.

Behrman will take over the place October 1, and may build his barn this Summer.

He tried to get the Witch Hazel Farm, near Reedville, but failing in this purchased the Col. Haynes place, as it is one of the finest of the line. The new purchaser thinks there is a great future for registered Jersey stock, and he will increase his herd so as he can make sales after a year or so.

The ranch lays between Forest Grove and Cornelius, and affords shipping facilities either at the station at the farm, or a mile or so away on the S. P.

MACHINERY "IN FIELD"

"As spring advances machinery for the spring work is already seen in some fields," announces George W. Kable, county agent of Benton. "It was left there last Fall," he sorrowfully observed. Still, he thinks much can be done to put it in the shape it should have been kept in. Broken and worn parts may be replaced; loose nuts tightened, rough surfaces painted, and smooth parts polished and protected. By making a list of needed repairs now farmers can place the orders with dealers in time to get them for early work.

MEAT IN COCOA SHOWN TO READERS

Portland Oregonian Takes Position for the League

A VERY TRITE EDITORIAL

Every Reader Should Peruse the Following

Every reader of this paper should read the following excerpt of Monday's Oregonian and the League of Nations: "Men who speak of the league as a danger to the Monroe doctrine have short memories. They forget that it is but a few years since we regarded Germany as a menace to that policy, were anxious for its formal acceptance by European nations and were considering what nations might help us to maintain it. That policy is simply an assertion of the right of nations to self-determination, which the league proposes to extend to other continents and to back with the power of all nations in place of one nation. It is reasonable to assume that the league would entrust settlement of any trouble in this hemisphere to the United States, for Europe has troubles of its own, which the league would delegate European nations to settle.

Much is said about the sacrifices which we should make as members of the league. What are they? Limitation of armaments; is not that what we have long advocated, condemning the armament race as madness? When others consent, shall we hold back? Arbitration of justiciable disputes; has not that been our established policy and should we not welcome means to make it universal and to back its decision with force? Mediation of other disputes; what terrors has that? How could the other league members compel us to submit to its decisions on questions of national policy such as every nation insists on deciding for itself, when they have such questions of their own and would hesitate to make a precedent which would plague them? Do they also not make sacrifices by joining the league? But for its restraints they could divide the German colonies and all of Turkey among them without becoming mandatories of a league. France could have the Rhine frontier, Italy the whole east coast of the Adriatic, including Albania. They yield much for the sake of the peace which the league would insure. We yield nothing except our isolation, which is already gone.

What about the burden which the league imposes? We came late into the war, which all now recognize to have been fought to preserve freedom and civilization, and have made sacrifices much less in proportion to our means than were made by the allies. We are called to help in lifting up the suffering nations of Europe and Asia, which trust us above all other nations. Shall we prove slackers in this great work for freedom and humanity? Could we undertake a nobler task than the building of the remnant of Armenia into a thriving, free state?

The nations of Europe have shown unbounded faith in us. In proposing that we assume the guardianship of Armenia, Britain proposes to place us squarely across the road to India, which was the cause of almost a century of feud with Russia. The men who now sow in the people's minds distrust of the nations which are thus ready to trust us and which were lately our comrades in arms, are sowing what may prove to be the seeds of future wars. They do not play a noble part."

YOUNG FELLOWS MAKE THE BEST AVIATORS

Lieutenant Bruce Schuman, of Portland, Tells of Foreign Flying

WAS IN FRANCE 2 YEARS

Tells of Air Service and the Big Things Anticipated Over There

Lieut. Bruce Schuman, with the U. S. Flying Squadrons in France since 1917, was in the city Sunday, a guest at the Mrs. J. W. Sewell home. Schuman says that the Liberty motor, evolved by the U. S. engine men, has anything beaten in Europe, but that the flying machines of France, England and Italy, have it over the American machines. This he says was the natural outcome of the fact that the allied machines were longer in use as battle planes, and they had the experience. He states that the young men from 18 to 25 make the best flyers because of the daredeviltry of their natures. They lack the caution that elder men have, and are always doing the unexpected—the thing that wins in combat in the air.

He stated that had the war continued a few months longer the American addition to European forces would in a month or so more have so augmented the French and English air service that Germany would have been literally riddled with bombs from the bombing planes, and thousand upon thousands of tons of high explosives would have been dropped on German cities.

An incident of the young chaps flying in training was told by Lieut. Schuman at the Hillsboro Club Sunday:

"A young fellow of about 20 was one of our best flying men in the training field. He went up one day and was doing a spiral around a tall tower. It looked suicidal, and he was shooting the machine contrary to orders. The Captain made the remark that he would go up and get on the lad's tail and ground him. The Captain went up and started after the youngster, who feinted and got above his superior officer and drove the Captain down to the ground. The lad was pulled from flying for a short time, but the joke was so apparent that it made a hero out of the youngster."

Lt. Schuman says that when the American boys went wild when the first U. S. built locomotive came down the line on the railway. The big engine used the air and came into the station at high rate of speed, threw on the air and stopped at the station much to the consternation of the French. When its whistle sounded the Americans near by knew it was one of our "hogs" and they went wild with enthusiasm.

"The American engineers showed the French many things over there in the way of big construction, sanitation, railway building, and construction of camps and wharves, road building, and bridge making and handling of avenues for the battle lines, and every young man of France, with 'pep' in him wishes to come over here," said Mr. Schuman.

Lt. Schuman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Schuman, of Portland, and he works in Oakland, Cal. He returns there in a short time to resume the position he held prior to enlistment.

Mr. and Mrs. Schuman Sr. accompanied him on his Hillsboro visit.
