TRIBUNE EDITOR GOT HIS SALARY

ORDERED NONE PAID TO EMPLOYER WHO ENTERED SERVICE BUT TOOK HIS OWN

AGAINST WAR WITH GERMANY

Joseph Medill Patterson and Writer of "Million Dollar Editorial" Testify in Defense of Paper in the Ford Case.

Mr. Clemens, Mich.—Witnesses for The Chicago Tribune in its defense of its action in labelling Henry Ford as "anarchist" included Joseph Medill Patterson, one of the editors of The Tribune and Clifford S. Raymond, writer of what is now known as the "million dollar editorial."

In the course of the testimony it was developed that Mr. Patterson issued an order when Tribune men began to enter the service of the country after the United States entered the war, that no wages were to be paid to the departing men, whether they had dependants or not, but that he personally continued to draw his salary of $20,000 a year after he went to France.

Both Mr. Patterson and Mr. Raymond also testified that they knew Germany wanted to see the United States at war with Mexico but that despite this fact The Tribune continued to urge intervention in Mexico and to oppose war with Germany. This was drawn out on cross-examination by counsel for Mr. Ford in an endeavor to show that The Tribune was pro-German up to the time the United States entered the war.

Arrested in Belgium

Counsel for Mr. Ford asked Mr. Patterson if it was not true that he had gone to Germany during the early days of the world war for the purpose of writing the German side of the controversy. Mr. Patterson denied this and counsel then introduced a copy of The Tribune in which the announcement was made that Mr. Patterson was being sent to Germany to get the German point of view. The witness admitted having been arrested in Belgium, on leaving Germany, on a charge that he had written pro-German articles.

"In The Tribune you opposed and denounced war with Germany, didn't you?" asked Ford counsel.

"We did not oppose war, we discouraged it," answered Mr. Patterson. "We had been at close quarters and we knew what an awful thing it was."

"But you advocated war with Mexico?"

"We advocated intervention."

"Well, doesn't intervention mean war?"

"Usually."

Advocated Taking Mexico

"You advocated the taking of Mexico too, didn't you?" The witness was inclined to deny this until shown a copy of The Tribune in which the seizure of Mexico was urged editorially and then answered "Yes."

Mr. Raymond, when asked by counsel on cross-examination why The Tribune excoriated Theodore Roosevelt because of his utterances following the sinking of the Lusitania, said he believed such talk was not helpful to the government in reaching a decision, and that calmness was desirable.

"Did you ever argue for calmness when a border difficulty arose?" asked Ford counsel.

"I think not," answered the witness. "You used some pretty violent language yourself, didn't you?"

"I believe we did."

Upon direct examination Mr. Raymond denied knowledge of the International Harvester Co. and Standard Oil Co., stocks held by relatives of the editors and publishers of The Tribune and also denied interference with his editorial utterances.

Mr. Patterson likewise denied that Standard Oil or the International Harvester have had any effect on The Tribune's editorial policies.

Mr. Patterson admitted having once been a member of the socialist party. Ford counsel offered in evidence Mr. Patterson's book, "A Little Brother of the Rich" in an effort to prove that Mr. Patterson once held views similar to those attributed to Henry Ford. It was not admitted.

Writer Too "Pro-British"

The witness admitted having discharged Frederick Wm. Well, The Tribune's London correspondent, before the United States entered the war. Counsel for Ford asked if Well was told that his articles were too pro-Ally.

"Too pro-British is what I probably said," returned the editor.

Col. Henry J. Reilly, commander of the famous artillery regiment from Chicago, known as "Reilly's Bucks" took the stand and testified as a military expert to the necessity for intervention in Mexico. A long deposition was also read from James W. Gerard, former U. S. Ambassador to Germany, placing the blame for Mexican troubles at Germany's door.

Joseph Galloway has sued Pearl Galloway for divorce, the grounds being cruel and inhuman treatment. The husband swears that the wife scolded and nagged him continually, and was dissatisfied because his earning capacity was not better. He also says the wife told him she had no affection for him, and she finally left him and went to Portland to reside. They were married at Vancouver in 1915. The plaintiff is a resident of this county.
