CONTAGIOUS DISEASES

The health laws of the State of Oregon require the reporting of the following contagious diseases by physicians in charge of cases:

Chicken pox, diphtheria, erysipelas, german measles, influenza (flu), measles, mumps, pneumonia, scabies (itch), scarlet fever, small pox, tuberculosis, whooping cough.

It is not incumbent upon any one to call a physician for the sake of diagnosis or treatment of these cases, under the law, but the cases must be reported to the county or municipal health officer in any event. The responsible party, if a physician is not called, is the head of the household, in which the above diseases exist. He is supposed to have the necessary intelligence to make a diagnosis, if he assumes the responsibility of the care of the diseases enumerated above, in the absence of an attending physician.

Severe penalties are imposed under the law for the violation of the health laws relating to the above diseases. It is with the belief that lack of information is the cause of most violation of the law that this bulletin is issued.

All reports made to the County Health Officer, relative to the above, will be used in the interest of public health.

Make reports without delay.

Dr. L. W. Hyde,

County Health Officer,

Hillsboro, Ore.
