J. S. Culbertson, of Manning, was a Hillsboro visitor Tuesday and Wednesday, meeting with the county court in regard to the roadway along the new rail line near his place. Quite a delegation accompanied him, and they threshed out the situation with the county court. Mr. Culbertson says that a big road meeting was held at Banks the first of the week, and two big delegations were present from Cedar Mill and from North Plains, asking support to the project of a state highway from Portland, via the Cornell road, on through North Plains and from there to Banks. The road association of Banks and her sister towns took no action on the matter as they have already endorsed the road out of the Grove to their point.

CIRCUIT COURT

Julia McGahie, of Portland, sues W. J. McGahie for divorce. They were married at Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1894, and desertion is the charge.

Preston Williams, who married Grace Mankins, in Portland, in 1913, wants a divorce. He says he took her to Tillamook county to live, and until he could get a home built they lived with his parents. She objected, so he says, and when the old folks moved she still objected, and he rented a house in Tillamook. The family just kept coming, and he says she called him vile names, his mother vile names, and she also hurled kitchen utensils at him. The lady filed a motion, asking the case be dismissed, but says if a divorce must be granted the plaintiff she wants the decree to restore her maiden name. The husband has turned over $1075 to her as her share of the property. Judge Bagley has ordered L. M. Hoyt to pay $100 per month to Maud Hoyt, pending divorce proceedings; $100 suit money at present, and more if needed. The $750 attorney fee stands, but Hoyt is required to pay but $150 of it at present, and other sums as the court may later determine.

Len B. Fishback, pastor of the Christian Church, is walking on crutches, the result of injuring an ankle while taking part in a basketball game.

They tell this for the truth—North Plains resident says that Will Darey went out to get a buck the other day and came in with one without firing a shot. He is said to have caught a spike buck that was broke to a halter. Some homesteader had caught the chap when he was small, and had tied him up and stall fed him. A day or so after the season opened Mr. Buck vomited and was trailing his dog chain when Darey caught him. They say Will denies it. Sufficient evidence was that he knew what he was doing when he left the home for a two mile trip without a round of cartridges.

Wanted—To rent 50 acres, more or less; must be in a high state of cultivation; will pay cash rent; buildings not necessary. Prefer Washington County.—Address W. E. C. A., Care Argus, Hillsboro, sealed envelope. 29
