J. B. ROSSMAN

J. B. Rossman, father of Dr. J. H. Rossman, president of the Hillsboro chamber of commerce, died suddenly in Portland Tuesday evening. He was found in his apartment dead and it is thought that heart trouble was the cause of death.

Mr. Rossman was well known here because of his many visits to the home of his son. He had been out here just a few days before his death. He is survived by two sons and one daughter. A. G. Rossman and Miss Elizabeth Rossman are the two other children besides Dr. Rossman. Miss Rossman, who is well known here, was on her way to New York to study music, but they were able to notify her at Minneapolis.

SCHOLLS CLUB NOTES

Scholls Woman's club will hold a special meeting on Friday, September 11, at the F. E. Rowell home. The particular occasion for this meeting is the presence of Sadie Orr Dunbar, state president of the Woman's Federation, who will speak. The president of club has been trying for some time to arrange for a date with Mrs. Dunbar and now that it is to be realized the club feels itself especially fortunate. The Hieton and Farmington clubs have also been invited to meet with them and have the benefit of her address. Meeting at the regular hour, 2 o'clock.

The members are requested to be prepared with appropriate quotations for roll call; also to have the Collect memorized.

Collect:
Keep us O God, from pettiness;
Let us be large in thought, word and deed;
Let us be done with fault-finding and leave off self-seeking.
May we put away all pretense and meet each other face to face, without self-pity and without prejudice.
May we never be hasty in judgment, but always generous.
Let us take time for all things.
Make us grow calm, serene and gentle.
Teach us to put into action our better impulses, straightforward and unafraid.
Grant that we may realize it is the little things that create differences, and in the big things of life we are as one.
And may we strive to touch and to know that the great common woman heart of us all;
And, O Lord, help us to be kind.
The time and place for the regular club meeting is September 10 with Mabel B. Allison. On account of this coming the day before the special meeting a full attendance is not expected.

Western Raspberry Rust Does Not Destroy Plant

Western raspberry rust is not serious enough in Oregon to justify grubbing the bushes up, as viewed by Dr. S. M. Zeller plant pathologist of the experiment station. No adequate control measures are known.

The rust appears in early summer as small yellow spots on the upper and under surfaces of leaves. The spots are spore masses produced by the fungus that lives in the leaf tissues, and are sometimes so numerous as to cover the leaves with yellow powder. The spore masses on leaves and cane cankers become black in the late season.

In its worst form the rust devitalizes the plants, but not so seriously as to stunt the plants unaided by other causes such as poor soil and degeneration diseases. Infection of new canes near the ground is the most serious phase of the disease in Oregon plantings. It causes cankers which eat into the cane causing brittleness. Such canes are hard to trelis and not infrequently break off in removal of the old canes.

The western raspberry rust is not to be confused with the orange rust, prevalent in the East but seldom found in the West, which renders the plants worthless. This form of rust completely covers the under side of the leaf with an orange powder. This rust is perennial in infected plants, lying dormant in winter and breaking out again in the spring. Because of this the plants so infected should be dug out and burned, but this radical treatment is not recommended with the western rust.

Taking out the fruiting canes as soon as the crop is picked will greatly reduce the source of infection. The old canes are cut as near the ground as possible. Where practical, the old leaves are taken out and destroyed. Otherwise, they are plowed under before the new leaves come out in the spring.

ONE MIDDLEMAN TO EVERY TWO FARMERS

Some time ago there was general clamor for reduction of transportation rates to help pull the farm industry out. This put the railroads on the defensive, and Benjamin F. Yoakum, former chairman of the board of directors of the St. Louis & San Francisco railroad, came to the front and hit back. He declared it was not high railroad charges that were holding down the farmer, but the middle-profit interests; that one middle-interest family is being supported by re-selling the products of about every two farm families of this county; that there are 3,793,000 food dealers selling the products of 6,500,000 families and that it costs $2 to distribute the products he gets $1 for, including the middle profits.

Yoakum knows, the farmers and everybody knows, that there is more than one cause for the decline of agriculture. High transportation costs, too many middle profits and excessive and unjust taxation are three of the big pullbacks, says State Market Agent C. E. Spence, and he says all three may be reduced when producers and consumers are organized strongly enough and work together. "Co-operation is simply business, good business, world-wide business. It is to get more for what is sold and to pay less for what is bought, and when this can be brought about there will be such an increase in consumption that farming will once more be a profitable and prosperous industry."
