We are glad to see that Governor Patterson is of the same opinion on an income tax as ex-Governor Pierce. No one denies the justice of such a tax and we are confident that most people want it.

THE BIRTHDAY OF WILL

The following verses were written on the 72nd birthday of William Tupper, January 28, by his youngest daughter, Mrs. Emma Edson, of Portland:

Seventy-two years ago today, dear daddy started on life's broad way.

He and his brother arrived at the farm, and the news soon spread that twins were born.

And of all the fussin', ravin', and talkin', as all the neighbors stood gazin' and gawkin'.

And folks came hurrin' to peek in the door, as if twins had never been born before.

Grandpa was proud as a turkey hen and uncles and aunts and Brother Ben,

And grandma, God bless her, had a mother's thrill, as she gazed on the red, wrinkled Willard and Will.

No need to describe the days on the farm, there beyond Dilley, where Daddy was born,

Hale, hearty and healthy, both girls and boys, with lots of pep and lots of noise,

Work mixed with play from morning till night, and God fearing parents who brought them up right,

How they did work and how they did play, down on the farm in the good old day,

The days flew by as days will do and the Tupper youngsters just grew and grew.

And grandma had no time to feel honary or ill, after the arrival of Willard and Will.

The twins were a puzzle as older they grew, for neighbors kept guessing and no one knew,

At least, not just positive which one or the other, was Willard or Will and which one his brother.

The teachers were sure in a terrible fix, for those pesky twins were chuck full of tricks,

And then when they grew to more mature size, and at the young damsels were casting their eyes,

The dear young dames were oft in a ponder, and lay awake of nights to wonder and wonder,

Whether the twin she'd been talking to was the Him himself or Who was Who?

Well, those childhood days are all in the past, for childhood joys are too good to last,

And the family is scattered and some of them gone, but those that are left must needs carry on.

For we all have our place and a niche to fill, Willard is finished but we still have Will.

Life has brought sorrow and life has brought joys, and a faithful companion and girlies and boys,

God has been gracious and we have two treasures, for whom we have honor and love without measure.

Old fashioned parents, a father and mother, God bless Will and family and those of his brother.

The Girl in the Mirror

Elizabeth Jordan

By The Century Company, WNU Service

Bangs lit off the end of a fresh cigar and smoked it in stolid silence. He was a person of one idea. If he couldn't talk about the play, he couldn't talk at all. He meditated, considering his characters, his situation, his partner's and his own position, in a mental jumble that had lately become habitual and which was seriously affecting his nerves. Laurie, as he ate, chatted cheerfully and at random, apparently avoiding with care any subject that might interest his partner. Bangs rose abruptly.

"Well, I'm off," he said. "See you at dinner time, I suppose."

But Laurie, it appeared, had engagements. He was taking a party of friends out to Gledney Farms that evening, in his new car, and they might decide to stay there for a day or two. Also, though he did not confide in this fact to Bangs, he had an engagement for the afternoon, at a place where the card rooms were quiet and elegant and the stakes high.

The attraction of these diversions filled his mind. He quite forgot the girl in the mirror, and it was no thought of her that drew him back to New York that night. The plans of his guests had changed, that was all. The change brought him home at eleven o'clock.

He fell asleep with surprising ease, and immediately, as it seemed, he saw the girl in the mirror. She was walking toward him, through what appeared to be a heavy fog. Her hands were outstretched to him, and he hurried to meet her; but even as he did so the fog closed down and he lost her, though he seemed to hear her calling him from somewhere far away.

He awoke late in the morning with every detail of the dream vivid in his mind, so vivid, indeed, that when he approached the mirror after his morning plunge, it seemed almost a continuation of the dream to find the girl there.

He stopped short with a chuckle. The curtains of his French window were drawn apart, and in the mirror he saw the reflection of the girl as she stood in profile near her own uncurtained window and slowly dressed her hair.

It was wonderful hair, much more wonderful than up. Laurie stared with pleasure at the red-gold masses that fell down over the girl's white garment. Then, with a little shock, he realized that the white garment was a night-dress. It was evident that the girl thought herself safe from observation and was quietly making her toilet for the morning.

Well, she should be safe. With a quick jerk, Laurie drew together the heavy curtains that hung at the sides of the long window. Then, smiling a little, he slowly dressed. His thoughts dwelt on the girl. It was odd that she should be literally projected into his life in that unusual fashion. He had never had any such experience before, nor had he heard of one just like it. It was unique and pleasant. It was especially pleasant to have her so young and so charming to look at. He wished he knew her name and something more about her. His thoughts were full of her.

Before he left the room he parted the curtains again to open the window wide, following his usual program. As he did so he glanced into his mirror. He saw her open window, but it was lifeless. Only his own disappointed face confronted him.

CHAPTER III

Laurie Meets Miss Mayo

Laurie thought much that day about the girl in the mirror, and he was again home at eleven that night, to the wonder of Mr. Bangs, who freely expressed his surprise.

"Something pleasant has come your way?" he tactfully asked.

Laurie evaded the question, but he felt that something definitely pleasant had come his way. This something was a new interest, and he had needed a new interest very much. He hoped he would dream of the girl that night, but as he and Bangs unwisely consumed a Welsh rabbit before they went to bed, he dreamed instead of something highly unpleasant, and was glad to be awakened by the clear sunlight of a brilliant January day.

After breakfast he strolled across the square into the somber hall of the studio building on its southwest corner. The hall was empty, but he found and rang a bell at the entrance of a dingy elevator shaft. The elevator descended without haste. When it had reached the floor, the colored youth in charge of it inhospitably filled its doorway and regarded the visitor with indifference. This young man was easy to look at, but he was no one he knew.

Laurie handed him a dollar and the youth's expression changed, first to one of surprise, then to the tolerance of a man who is wise and is willing to share his wisdom. The visitor went at once to the point of his visit.

"A young lady lives here," he began. "She is very pretty, and she has reddish hair and brown eyes. She has a studio in one of the upper floors at the front of the house. What's her name?"

The boy's face showed that he had instantly recognized the description, but he made no acknowledgment.

Local Band Feature at Venetian

Gail Karns and his Shadyside band made a decided hit with their novel stage presentation at the Venetian Sunday, Monday and Tuesday. The act was very much "different" in that it ran the gamut from jazz to classical numbers, with a liberal sprinkling of solos, lighting effects and scenic investiture thrown in for good measure.

One of the highlights of the program was a delightful bass solo, "Bells of the Lighthouse." Another specialty that came in for a generous share of applause was the "Indian Love Call," played by the saxophone trio, blended in perfect harmony.

Miss Mike McCloud contributed the comedy bits of the act. Her "Where Has My Little Dog Gone?" threw the capacity house into an uproar of laughter.

All in all, the act was on a par with any similar attractions ever seen by this writer on the big vaudeville circuits. It is a credit to Gail Karns, who organized this splendid orchestra right in this community. It is a credit to the Venetian and to

Holdups Active in City on Saturday

Two men operating a Chrysler sedan staged two holdups here about midnight Saturday. Raymond L. Gibbons reported to the sheriff's office that when he was going home about 11 o'clock a car stopped alongside of him at the curb at Eighth and Oak streets and two men rushed him, taking two pocket knives from him.

Shortly after 12 o'clock the second report came in from Sixth and Main, where Ed Mason of the local Buick agency told of the same experience. He thought that it was a joke at first and grabbed the gun arm of the first one to accost him, but the second man brought him to a realization of what was happening. He was frisked of $4.80.

FARM LOAN GROUP IN ANNUAL MEET

tor of the Oregon and southern Idaho district in the bank, spoke at the meeting. He offered his services to any individual in the district whenever they may need him. He pointed out it is impossible for him to reach each and every individual interested in the bank at all times. For this reason he urged that anyone having any problem that he might desire to take up with the bank should write to him at Pendleton.

Group discussions centered around bank and farm loan problems. The Spokane district, as well as any of the 12 banks, are subdivided into local districts to handle the several problems that arise from local conditions. This district, for instance, is not held for a district in Montana. A local association can be dissolved without effecting any other. The bad conditions in Montana have only effected Oregon in that they absorb dividends.

One of the primary functions of such meetings as the one held Monday is to spread information and knowledge regarding the bank, it was explained. There was a similar meeting held in Corvallis Tuesday.

Representatives from the various associations over the district were present and many of them attended the chamber of commerce luncheon.

The school children realized about $10 on the candy sale. The members of the cast: Courtney Syverson, Lawrence Day, Harry Williams, Raymond Heard, Eddie Bergert, Jean Smith, Agnes Syverson, Faye Syverson, Florence Cary and Muriel Douglas.
