When my Locks Have Turned to Gray

Darling, when I have grown older— And my locks have turned to gray, Will you love me then, I wonder, As it seems you do today? Oft I sit and dream and ponder, Thus I do so, day by day, Of our meeting in the Up-Yonder On the final Judgment Day. In these years we've been together Our two hearts have beat as one, Death could not these ever sever, 'Neath the heavens or shining sun, I will love you then, my sweetheart, The year has turned to gray, I will see you then, my darling, As you were when young and gay. Copyright 1927 by Albert Edward Richardson, Banks, Ore.

Fragrant Snow

One by one the blossoms fall Till Nature claims them all, She closely hugs them to her bosom, Each white, pearly blossom. Like snow they cover the ground, The wind twirls them around High in the air to sail, And leaves a snowy trail. 'Tis lovely fragrant snow! Blossom clouds gracefully hung low; Give the branches a shake, Down comes a shower of blossom flakes. —Merle Spiering, Laurel.
