Electricity Costs on Farm Available

The Oregon farmer who now has electricity available from a private or public source may obtain for the first time authoritative and unbiased information as to the exact cost and the practicability of operating dozens of farm and household devices with electric power.

Those who visited the Oregon state fair this year saw the first general display made by the Oregon committee on the relation of electricity to agriculture, which has been working for four years in cooperation with the Oregon experiment station in careful investigations to determine and disseminate facts regarding the use of electricity for profit and convenience on Oregon farms.

The central feature of the experiment station display at the fair consisted of numerous pieces of electrical equipment from a curling iron to a hay hoist, on which exhaustive tests have been made as to cost of operation and adaptability for economical farm use. Some of the pieces of equipment shown, such as the milking machine, were strictly commercial products, while others, like the electric brooder and the big electric farm refrigerator, were actually designed and constructed by those in charge of the investigations. As manufacturers in the past have designed their production strictly for city consumption, equipment companies have been as much "at sea" as the farmers as to what can be used economically in farm operations.

Much data has now been gathered on different types of pumping outfits both for irrigation purposes and water systems. Power refrigerators for city use are inadequate for farms, so a new large box has been designed for use with a standard refrigerator unit which will hold full sized cream cans, egg crates, a quarter of beef and similar produce. Many types of feed grinders and choppers were shown, as well as water heaters and poultry house lighting circuits. Detailed information on any of these may now be had free by addressing the Oregon experiment station.

In those sections of the state where sheep guano is used for fertilizer for strawberries, application at the rate of one ton to the acre is found satisfactory. This amount is good regardless of the age of the plants and is applied by broadcasting between the rows rather than by placing around each plant. Roots spread so far that full benefit will be derived in this manner, says the experiment station.

Better--Not Bigger Farms Needed

Groups, Associations and National organizations working with Agricultural specialists have effected a revolution in the methods and machinery of farming that enable operators of small acreages to increase production without increasing overhead.

Not the least of such agencies for the improvement of practices in Livestock farming, Dairying and Agriculture is the Pacific International Livestock Exposition, the 18th Annual of which will be held at Portland, Oregon, November 3-10. Yearly more than 120,000 persons see and study the exhibits of pure bred Beef and Dairy Cattle, Horses, Sheep, Hogs, Goats and Foxes competing for the $100,000.00 offered in prizes. Combined also are great Dairy, Land and Manufacturers' Products Shows, Wool and Mohair Show, and Industrial Exposition.

Because of its educational value, greater size and increasing quality of exhibits we, here at the Commercial National Bank, recommend attendance at this year's Exposition.

Feed Mineral

BEAVER BRAND and IMPERIAL BRAND Dairy and Poultry Feeds incorporate proved feed values, as they are developed by experimental and practical feeding tests.

Minerals (calcium, phosphorus, chlorine, sodium and iodine) are not contained in sufficient quantities in ordinary grain and roughage rations to replace these materials in the tissues and bones in cows or poultry when under heavy production. Practically all experiment stations now recommend supplementing ordinary feeds with a reasonable amount of mineral.

Many herds of milk cows, as well as numerous flocks of chickens that were just getting by, have been brought into profitable production by feeding these valuable and very necessary ingredients.

Try out a sack or two—Or try a ton or so of feed containing minerals in the proper proportion.

Our Field Men will be glad to call and discuss feeding problems.
