Wood is "coming back." Uncle Sam used wood for the deck of his newest and largest submersible, the V-1. This kind of weather is "just right" for setting posts and building fence. Pool-Gardner Lumber company has a stock of good split cedar posts at 15 cents each, also barbed wire and poultry netting.

The Toggery Rack for the inside of the closet door is the solution for traffic congestion in the closet and on the closet floor. A Toggery Rack will make a most practical Christmas present for the "man about the house."

For artists' colors, Bronzes, Bronzing Liquids, Transfers, Transfer Varnishes, Laequeurs, Decoret Varnishes and Enamel, all for gift making, come to Pool-Gardner Lumber company, Building Material Merchants, telephone 2691.

Faulty School Lights

Good Illumination Important in the Class Room

"'Twas the light and not the child that failed." Did you ever see this written on the bottom or back of that kill-joy misnomer—the report card?

Probably not, but modern educators, architects and electrical engineers have seen it, and are writing after having been apprised of the fact that faulty lighting has an important bearing on "grades" and therefore on taxes.

That defective vision is frequently acquired, and is often progressive, is shown by the fact that eye troubles are more prevalent among children in the advanced grades. For instance, 1 per cent of the children entering school are near-sighted, while about 33 per cent are near-sighted at the end of their eighth year. That adequate illumination can offset to a great extent the handicap of defective vision was demonstrated effectively in a test conducted on a group of public school children who were decidedly backward in their studies.

These children were observed un-

Business Men Ask Ad Writing Course

With scores of business men in eastern Oregon already registered, the new home study course in advertising copy and layout offered in that section of the state several weeks ago is meeting with enthusiastic response.

The course is given under the auspices of the extension service of the Oregon State Agricultural college and is taught by Professor C. J. McIntosh, professor of industrial editing.

Mr. McIntosh was first urged to promote such a course for the benefit of business men in towns where no advertising specialists are available, while he was in the eastern part of the state last spring in the interest of his other home course in community news writing. Completing the plans this summer, he has recently opened the course for registration with the first class limited to 100. Other sections of the state will be reached later.

The problem presented to Mr. McIntosh by business men and editors in the smaller cities and towns is that with good roads and rapid transportation many of the community centers are in danger of losing the remaining business service to competitors in the large cities presenting their wares through attractive advertising.

"While adjustment to new conditions is inevitable, the time will probably never come when a community can well do without adequate business service," says Professor McIntosh. "If by this course we are able to assist the merchants in presenting the advantages of home trade in such a way that their volume of business will be increased with consequent lower prices and better service to the community, we will be satisfied."

What to advertise, principles of display, layout, type style, illustrations, shape and tone, adding punch and other factors are considered in the 12 lessons.

Every failure up to high school costs the state $450. Yet, at an estimated cost of less than $1.50 per child per year, good illumination can be provided, which will decrease eye troubles and resultant backwardness.
