Smallpox Called A Preventable Disease

Oregon State Board of Health
Of all the "catching" diseases smallpox is the most completely preventable. Smallpox will be eradicated when everybody is successfully vaccinated. All cases should be reported promptly by the health officer and effectually quarantined. Everyone who has been in touch with or near a case of smallpox should be vaccinated. Every one who has been exposed to the disease should be under observation for at least two weeks.

Most of the smallpox in this state has been mild but we have had a number of severe cases which demonstrated that the disease can become virulent at any time. An exposure to a severe form is much more likely to cause serious infection than exposure to a mild form. All forms of smallpox, however, are prevented by successful vaccination. Second attacks of smallpox are rare but do occur.

A single successful vaccination will give a certain amount of protection throughout life. It usually will protect against the milder forms of the disease. That, however, is not true of the severer forms of the disease. It is a good rule to be vaccinated every five years. If you are immune there will be only a slight reaction.

There is no operation so simple and safe as vaccination, when properly performed and cared for. Millions of vaccinations have been performed with no ill results. Vaccination therefore is no longer to be feared, but rather to be sought as the only safe, positively harmless and absolutely certain safeguard against smallpox.

The Hill method of vaccination consists of cleansing the arm with 60 percent alcohol or ether. When this has evaporated the vaccine is placed on the cleansed surface. A needle is then laid parallel to the arm and pressed lightly against the skin, the point carrying the vaccine through a minute puncture estimated to be about 1-1000 of an inch. Six of the superficial punctures are made. The operation is absolutely painless and children do not know when it is done; it is so imperceptible. There is no sign of hemorrhage and there is no lesion which can be seen by the naked eye. The vaccine is wiped off; no dressing is necessary. This operation done on a clean arm with pure potent lymph and kept perfectly clean never will make a serious sore. This method of vaccination leaves a little scar which is conclusive evidence that you have been successfully vaccinated against smallpox.
