Two Year Courses Planned By College
Hereafter high school graduates who plan to operate farms or become homemakers, but do not care for the full degree courses in agriculture or home economics, may obtain intensive practical training in these two schools through two-year courses just approved by the regents of Oregon State college.

The aim of these new courses is to allow the students to get brief practical training in subjects applicable to home and farm life, without forcing them to take the full four years of work which would fit them for a large number of occupations. Credit acquired in the short course may later be applied on degree work, if the student so desires.

Unanimous opposition to any tampering at present with the millage bills which support higher education in this state was the stand taken by the college board of regents in its January meeting. A change now, in view of present state finances, is unwise, they felt, even though the income from the millage tax has not kept pace with the increase in state property nor with the growth of this institution.

With 249 new students entering at the beginning of the second term, the total of full time students on the campus has increased to 3715 for the year, reported President W. J. Kerr. Including the summer session, this number is swelled to 5133.

Proposed changes in Oregon cooperative laws will be considered at the annual meeting of the Oregon Co-operative council at Salem, January 17 and 18, announced George O. Gatlin, secretary, and marketing specialist of Oregon Extension service. Thirty associations are members of this council.

Dress has an influence on the wearer as well as on the observer. One loses self-respect when dressed in a ragged or soiled garment. An over-dressed or inappropriately dressed woman is uncomfortable herself and wins the respect of others with difficulty. Good nature may be increased or decreased as the clothes worn are clean, comfortable and appropriate, or the reverse. Perhaps on first thought it may seem an exaggeration to say that neat clothing is a factor in virtue, but observation will prove that it is easier "to be good" when properly dressed.

Safety, silence and simplicity are features of the new Ford six-brake system

ONE of the first things you will notice when you drive the new Ford is the quick, effective, silent action of its six-brake system.

This system gives you the highest degree of safety and reliability because the four-wheel service brakes and the separate emergency or parking brakes are all of the mechanical, internal expanding type, with braking surfaces fully enclosed for protection against mud, water, sand, etc.

The many advantages of this type of braking system have long been recognized. They are brought to you in the new Ford through a series of mechanical improvements embodying much that is new in design and manufacture. A particularly unique feature is the simple way by which a special drum has been constructed to permit the use of two sets of internal brakes on the rear wheels.

A further improvement in braking performance is effected by the self-centering feature of the four-wheel brakes—an exclusive Ford development. Through this construction, the entire surface of the shoe is brought in steady, uniform contact with the drum the instant you press your foot on the brake pedal. This prevents screeching and howling and makes the Ford brakes unusually silent in operation.

Another feature of the Ford brakes is the ease of adjustment.

The four-wheel brakes are adjusted by turning a screw conveniently located on the outside of each brake plate. This screw is so notched that all four brakes can be set alike simply by listening to the "clicks."

The emergency or parking brakes on the new Ford require little attention. However, should they need adjustment at any time, consult your Ford dealer for prompt, courteous, and economical service. He works under close factory supervision and he has been specially trained and equipped to help you get the greatest possible use from your car over the longest period of time at a minimum of trouble and expense.
