Paint Talk Found Interesting Now

By BETTY HOLMES. Courtesy Bass-Hueter Paint Co. When nature dresses in her spring gown the creations of man immediately look shabby. In houses—so dull and drab after the rigors of winter—the remedy is often simple—just a fresh coat of paint. And if it be colorful, too, the chances are that the householder will feel an increased pride in his property. For the very nature of color is to stimulate and give pleasure.

Today one notes with great delight the increased number of lovely homes whose exteriors colorfully blend into their surroundings. But though color is taking a more vivid place in house-painting, there are still many homes whose quiet tones and trim whiteness proclaim that their owners are among the conservative who want to be very sure that their paint job is safe and sane.

Discretion is the better part of valor when there is any question of successful color in house painting, but now come helps for these conservative folk. "Color-charting" is becoming the thing among those who decide the destiny of house colors and many are the devices which have been contrived to make it easy.

One such, which I use and like very much, is the B-H exterior color harmony selector, which takes all the color guesswork out of house painting. It is made on the same principle as the B-H interior color harmony selector which I told you about in these columns last fall.

Based on the natural laws of color harmony, the selector automatically shows harmonious color schemes for complete exteriors—body, trim, roof and even the possible accents of color in awnings and flower groupings. By its help the most inexperienced can go adventuring in house colors—surely.
