I. J. Merrill: "I saw it twice and it is the best talking picture I ever saw."

"The Broadway Melody" is not only the first all-talking, all-singing, all-dancing picture to be shown in Hillsboro, but it is the first one produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. It is interesting because its makers are reported to consider it the best possible advance messenger for their other all-dialogue films.

It is considered one of the most brilliant talking films ever produced and critics, who viewed its New York premiere, pronounce it the best talking picture so far produced by any company. The lead parts are taken by Charles King, Bessie Love and Anita Page.

The supporting cast is a large and noteworthy one, including Jed Prouty, Kenneth Thomson, Edward Dillon, Mary Moran, Eddie Kane, J. Emmett Beck, Marshall Ruth and Drew Demarest. Harry Beaumont, director of the sensational "Our Dancing Daughters," handled the megaphone. Among the catchy tunes which permeate the production are its theme song, "Broadway Melody," "Love Boat" and "You Were Meant For Me." The dialogue was written by James Gleason and Norman Huston, popular playwrights, the lyrics by Arthur
