WHEN our experience suggests the use of colored paper, colored ink or a combination of the two for the job you submit, an aid toward increasing possible returns, we tell you so. If white paper and black ink are best, we suggest them.

A Suggestion

Because of the high cost of hay we would like to make a suggestion that we know will save you money.

Use Molasses

Mix molasses with hay or straw and it makes a very nutritious food and will bring a double return—your stock will do as well as when fed first-class hay, and it will cost you less, considering the high cost of hay.

Let us figure with you and we know we will be able to save you money.

Good equipment makes a good farmer better

Wins $2000 and Buys New Iron

During November 82 new families made Oregon their home, buying 4169 acres of land scattered in all parts of the state and investing $200,250.00 in all forms of property, equipment and household goods, according to W. G. Ide, manager of the Oregon State Chamber of Commerce. During the 11 months of 1929 a total of 722 families have located in Oregon, as against 435 during 1928.

Over 1000 families answered classified advertising concerning Oregon, inserted by the state chamber in 22 newspapers and farm publications during the month of November. These publications circulate in Canada and in every state of this country, the bulk being distributed in the middle states and California. In all of this advertising and in the follow-up the prospective citizens of Oregon are being encouraged and invited to visit this state for first-hand information. From this source alone a great tourist movement is expected during 1930.

Deadly Gas In Closed Garage

Oregon State Board of Health.

Every year we issue a bulletin warning the people against running their automobile engines in closed garages. Several deaths are yet reported annually to this office from this cause. With the advent of cold weather comes the need of warning against closed garages when killing an engine to heat it for the morning exit, or tinkering with the automobile while the engine is running. Running an engine for a short time in a closed garage produces enough carbon monoxide to make it extremely dangerous. This is especially true when the motor is cold and as a result the combustion of the fuel is incomplete. It is never advisable to run an automobile engine in a closed garage. When it is necessary to work in a room where motors are running an adequate system of ventilation should be installed.

Could this gas give warning of its presence by some offensive or even characteristic odor the danger would be lessened. But the gas is odorless and colorless and so one is defenseless against it unless one has taken the precaution to open garage doors and windows while the engine is running.

Attacks of headache and dizziness also occur in a tightly closed car, if there be leaky joints, with a gradual leakage of carbon monoxide gas from the exhaust. Children are particularly susceptible to this gas and on a long trip in cold weather one should have some ventilation in the car.

Carbon monoxide has the power of very quickly combining with the hemoglobin of the blood, 300 times more so readily than oxygen. That is why it is so disastrous. It shuts off from the blood the needed oxygen and asphyxiation follows. The air of a closed garage is so quickly filled with this gas one cannot escape, unconsciousness and death ensuing before any noticeable symptoms appear, such as headache, drowsiness or dizziness, symptoms which mark the poisoning when only minute quantities of this gas are present.

Recovery from exposure to carbon monoxide depends upon immediate removal to fresh air. This results in beginning immediately the elimination of the gas. Oxygen, with a small percentage of carbon dioxide, has been found to hasten the recovery.

Always open wide the garage door when you warm up the engine.
