Community Development

IN seeking a cause for the growth of one community as compared with another, one must finally admit that it is ENTERPRISE. This same word enters into the growth of organization and is one of the strongest factors in the forward movement of business.

American business men, using all factors for business extensions, develop new markets, increase consumption of old products, invent and develop new articles of commerce and steadily move their business ahead.

Undoubtedly no greater force in business exists than advertising. In the phenomenal rise of the United States to a position of a world leader in 152 short years, it has played its part by making wanted goods of American manufacturers. Perhaps you, as an individual, feel that advertising is little or nothing to you, but this is not a fact. Every one of us is influenced by it because we are all buyers of something at some time. We are influenced in what we buy through either reading about it or by being told. Those who tell us we are influenced in a like manner. Advertising makes known.

Name any one of several reasons why you selected this city in which to live. Being here you are now confronted with the necessity of a livelihood unless you have sufficient for your needs and have retired. But by far the great majority must work. Therefore, as the community prospers, you prosper. Advertising aids a community by making known its advantages and what it has to offer the investor. It brings tourists and visitors. It means added population—added prosperity.—Ex.
