Man Who Started World War Now Writing Memoirs to Justify Himself

IN the quiet of his home in Vienna, a man, near 70, is penning his memoirs as this armistice day rolls around. His name is not familiar. Neither is his picture. Yet it was he, according to recently published historical documents, who was more responsible for bringing about the war than any other individual.

He is Count Leopold von Berchtold, former secretary of state and foreign minister in the cabinet of Emperor Franz Joseph of Austria.

The charge against Berchtold is that he falsified documents and deceived not only Kaiser Wilhelm and Sir Edward Grey of England but his own monarch, Emperor Franz Joseph.

How It Started Every one knows now that the conflagration was ignited with the assassination in Serbia of the Austrian crown prince and his wife. No nation considered this sufficient cause, however, to indict the entire Serbian people.

Yet Berchtold, the historian now says, quickly seized this excuse to go to war. His anxiety was inspired by a desire to regain for himself, as well as for his country, some of the prestige both had lost in diplomatic exchanges following the third Balkan war in 1913.

Because of blunders, Austria's prestige noticeably declined, while Serbia's efforts to extend her power to the Adriatic and to win recruits for the ideal of a great Serbia among the Slavs of Austria-Hungary became more and more evident.

For these reasons, Berchtold, in spite of warnings that any belligerent action on his part would set the whole world at war, sought a break with Serbia.

Following the assassination, he sent to Serbia an ultimatum so severe in its demands that Grey called it the "most formidable document ever sent one state to another."

Berchtold, quiet and with no thought of war, demurred on only two points, which practically indicated her willingness to abide by Austria's orders. When Kaiser Wilhelm, in fact, was handed a text of the Serbian answer to the ultimatum, he wrote on its margin:

"With this every reason of war disappears. Geis (Austrian ambassador at Belgrade) might have remained quietly at Belgrade. On the strength of this I should never have ordered mobilization."

Opportune Times Ahead Leonard P. Ayres, banker and business economist, recently voiced this thought: "It is during periods when business is bad and prices are low, that men of courage and independent thought have always been able to start on the path that leads to future success.

The foundations of fortune are laid in times of adversity."

Quite true—and we believe that Mr. Ayres might have added that such men have had the foresight to establish adequate banking relations with a good bank.
