Why a Community Newspaper?

Contest Sponsored by Adrain VanKoevering of Zeeland, Mich. By Elsie Glasier Jones, 1619 Forres Ave., St. Joseph, Michigan (Fourth Place)

Every community, however small, needs a newspaper of its own because without its own organ of news exchange it is a deaf-mute community. It has nothing to say and no way of hearing anything directly connected with its own vital interests. Without responsible reporting, openly uttered, it has only such dumb gestures as the party line, the sewing circle and public sales. Such a community, by actions more eloquent than words, proclaims to the world that it profess ords, proclaims to the world that it prefers grape-vine gossip languishes it is a pretty sure sign that such spirit has died. The editor is at best only an artisan. Though he do his work beautifully or badly he merely shapes the stone. It is up to the community to say whether he shall carve monuments to living achievement or chisel the epitaph of a departed spirit.

Wherever there is a community with a citizenship to be proud of, there will be news to print. Wherever there are merchants whose wares are worth buying, there will be ad-vertising. Wherever there are families deserving the name of neighbor, there will be reader interest in the third that here neighbor, there will be reader interest in the things that happen to them. And wherever these three are gathered there will come a fourth to abide with them—the home-town editor with that homely, friendly sheet, the home-town paper. As the community spirt lives in them, there will be a living in it for him. His is a service comparable to the highest, his a privilege

Every community should have a newspaper then, in token that it is a community. As life grows by self expression, so will each community develop by nourishing its own medium of expression, the newspaper.

more intelligent than the sum of its individual communities If the home-town newspaper serves and saves its immediate neighborhood it serves and saves no less the nation whose health and stability it reports and interprets. We read the great metropolitan papers to see what is going on in the world but we are usually more curious, then concerned. When we we read our own names listed as among those present, we find out in the editorial columns what our home-town editor

Anarchists do not thrive in a small town nor read a small Anarchists do not thrive in a small town nor read a small town paper. Communists and radicals of any stripe are born and nourished on the vague feeling that they do not matter—that they can have no voice in anything that concerns them. Seeing our names in the home-town paper once in a while

Yes, we must have a community newspaper, not only to keep the community itself alive and functioning, but to make us part of the larger world. We are become a nation of readers it is true, but we are small and selfish, and primitive in a certain sense still, and we truly believe and accept as part of ourselves only what our neighbors believe and accept—the things that the community newspaper tells us

The community without its own home-town newspaper is not in a real sense a community at all. It is merely a neighborhood without a community consciousness. Where a genuine community feeling exists, it demands expression as surely as a baby's hunger cries out for milk. If the community spirit is strong, the local newspaper prospers; if the home-town paper languishes it is a wroth sure sign that such spirit has died.

equal to the greatest—to cement and foster the friendly co-operation that makes his paper possible.

But more than this-no nation is stronger, more patriotic, but we are usually more curious than concerned. When we want to feel that we ourselves matter— that we have some importance of our own we pick up the community newspaper, thinks about things in general and we feel, reassured and at peace. We are not merely spectators at the mercy of far off political bodies—we have become citizens, a part and parcel of all that goes on in the world.

cial attention—is permanently silent! This is virtually true also of the new Air-Cooled Electrolux Gas Refrigerator -for it contains no moving parts!

Electrolux is the only absorptiontype refrigerator made. It requires no machinery to compress its simple refrigerant. A tiny gas flame and ordinary air do all the work!,

Nothing was sacrificed in Electrolux to give you these important advantages. It contains, in addition, all the refinements skilled artists and farsighted engineers could devise; such as, beauty of design; gleaming white easily-cleaned finish; stainless chromium hardware; interior lighting; ample storage space; trays that release at the trip of a trigger; split shelves that accommodate large bottles and roasts; temperature regulator that speeds freezing and defrosts without stopping.

Whether or not you are planning an All. Gas Kitchen, which authorities agree is the ideal kitchen, for it includes quick, economical cooking and abundant hot water besides carefree, silent refrigeration, you should have an Electrolux Gas Refrigerator. Your Gas Company is so certain that you'll
