The second crop of alfalfa is being harvested, while some of the oats and vetch crop is still in the field. Bales are having a hard time keeping up with the harvesting. Grain is expected to be out in some of the districts.

Fourth Discussed
Pleading that the Fourth of July be celebrated in a manner, which would be both Christian and American, Pastor Henry S. Haller pointed out in his Sunday morning sermon at Pilgrim House chapel service that a commercialized Fourth was able to be described by neither adjective. A holiday marked by drunkenness or one in which narrow nationalism and preparation for war was the uppermost ideal was neither Christian nor American, he declared. The positive side of the Fourth was emphasized Monday morning at chapel, when the pastor preached on "True Liberty," and said that only by making the principles of the Christ the norm of our living, could the nation reach the high point toward which the founding fathers aimed.

A SUMMER RECREATION PROGRAM FOR TOWNS IN OREGON

Editor's Note: This is the second of a series of three articles outlining a summer recreation program for communities of the state, written by Dr. Edward Dean and Director of Physical Education, University of Oregon.

Part II—Groups to be Included in the Program

The first group we should plan for is the pre-school child. It is a common idea that the pre-school child should be taken care of in the home. This can probably be done in the smaller cities, but as communities grow it becomes more and more difficult to meet the demands for the proper care of this group. "Safety" is the key-note of their entire program. Whatever play apparatus is needed can be simple, easily built, and without expense. Sandboxes, swings, automobile tire hung up on a tree suggest the simple type of apparatus that can be used with preschool children. They need some place by themselves where there will be no danger of traffic and where they will be out from under the larger and more active children. Many towns have attempted to solve this problem by building neighborhood playgrounds. An empty lot, cleared of debris, although small, affords ample space for the young children. It is usually necessary to provide in this small playground a place for the mother who may care to read or sew or mend while the little children play. The general program, then, is built up around facilities for play, with safe apparatus to play on, but also a pleasant place as well.

The next group to demand attention is that represented by the boys and girls from 7 to 12. This group demands more space for its activities, as these children play more vigorous games, they are interested in ball games, in running games, in activities at high speed. They have not yet developed finer coordinations, and skill is not an important part of their program. They need larger spaces than the neighborhood playgrounds, places where they can play ball or where they can be made to run or where they will be in contact with the smaller children nor with those of the next age older.

We must not forget at this time that children need indoor facilities made for a winter when the simple outdoor place where the boys can construct toys of one sort or another, or girls can work at basketry or handicrafts, is not available. This can be worked out in the rough, where activity can go on. This is a constructive age, when ideas are bursting and the urge to activity of some sort must be taken care of.

In the next group young people 13 to 16 years old need to be thought of. Outdoor space increases again, and the program must be planned in larger terms. Instead of playing smaller ball games, these people will be interested in hard ball, where skill is an important factor, and where the competition is keen. They will want to play in tournaments, they will appreciate planning and managing competitions of many kinds. If they build aeroplanes they should be encouraged to will fly if they make kites, they make kites that are interesting because of their size, or because they are particularly beautiful, or because they are of some unusual shape. For these people the outdoors extends largely beyond the confines of the town; they are interested in hiking, nature walks and talks, map making, geology trips, and other types of excursions, which are entered into with keen interest. For the workshop indoors, their equipment must be more elaborate; they need more skilled manipulation; the finished idea is as important as the development of the idea. In many training they show unusual skill, but their ideas are more extensive and may run to puppet shows, to clay modeling, to radio building, and such activities as these.

Another group must be considered, and this is the age group from 17 to 21. Here again the fields for activities enlarge and the fitness requirements in baseball, golf, swimming, tennis, and other types of activities. This group is interested in self direction, as to management and as to organization of their program. From this group can also be recruited the squad leaders who can assist in the work for the younger classes. This group also makes the necessary for evening parties, town parties, dramatic performances, music clubs, etc. clubs, not only from the standpoint of participation, but the management and writing of plays. Here we find much creative ability which will have an outlet.

Then comes the adult group. An old idea which has actuated most of our thinking is that recreation is only for young people. It is my hope that we can get away from this antiquated theory. Recreation for the old folks is not the same as recreation for the young folks. It is not to be expected that adults will participate in the same sort of activities as those enjoyed by the more active, more versatile younger people. In this group it becomes less important for all to do the same thing. The activities can be of a very diverse sort. Under a proper recreational program, however, those who are interested in the same sort of activities can get together. Horseback club, golf tournaments, picnics, town parties, orchestras, and bands, all represent types of activities in which the older people may enjoy a pleasurable evening with their neighbors.

Unconscious Truth
The dear, old minister was called upon to preach the funeral sermon for a minister, who was not a very indifferent and inactive member of his church.

"Friends," the minister began, looking at the casket of the departed, "for 30 years I have preached to this corpse."

And then he wondered at the air in the audience, and the looks one set another with so much amusement in them as dared be expressed at a funeral service.
