WASHINGTON, July 25—Absence of the high government officials from the capital has been felt by state and community leaders. Only routine matters are handled by the small staff of officials, which accounts for the feeling that the policies of the government are being handled in a haphazard manner. The feeling is that the government is not doing its job as well as it should. The feeling is that the government is not doing its job as well as it should. The feeling is that the government is not doing its job as well as it should.

The epidemic of labor disturbances is a cause of concern among officials here, who had anticipated a quiet summer. Interrelations as to the objectives behind these outbreaks are widely divergent. Some feel that the labor and radical wings of the labor federations are staging these affairs in a determined effort to unnerve conservatives. While organized labor made tremendous strides under NIRA, certain elements in the ranks have favored a militant attitude as a means of gaining more concessions. The tale of the communists' participation is taken lightly here as it is generally understood the influence of these wild-eyed agitators is actually of little importance. Veteran labor leaders are frankly worried as to the effect of the strikes and violence on public sentiment. The unions have an ambitious program of social legislation on the floor for the next congress and the aftermath of marked disturbances may undermine congressional support.

The immutable laws of nature are playing more havoc with the administration's farm policies than all the criticisms of the affected groups. The agricultural areas are presenting a pessimistic picture, which makes it difficult for Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and his advisors to visualize the policies with the public during these disquieting days. In an effort to sell their policies to the public, these high officials are endeavoring a series of explanatory talks throughout the west. Mr. Wallace is concentrating the attention of the farmers on the possibilities of re-opening the markets for agricultural products. It is an open secret that the new tariff bargaining program is not working as smoothly as forecast at the time the law was passed.

The department of agriculture is mustering its full strength in defense of the processing taxes, which have been subjected to a fire of criticism from the consumer public. Wallace contends that the elimination of processing taxes would be a death blow to farm relief. Because of the depressing effect of the drought, the new dealers in charge of agricultural relief matters are hopeful that President Roosevelt will take up the cause in defense of the federal adjustment plan on his return from Hawaii. The first installment and payment to co-operating wheat growers will be met in October at the rate of 20 cents per bushel on the growers' domestic allotments. The Agricultural Adjustment administration and the Commodity Credit Corporation are trying to pacify the farmers by extending the maturity date of corn loan notes.

Considerable confusion has developed in the public's mind as to the powers of the Federal Housing Administration recently created by an act of congress. Many people have assumed that they could make direct and immediate loans from this new federal agency to improve their homes. On the contrary, the Federal Housing Administration has no authority to advance money to private citizens or corporations for home modernization purposes. The F. H. A. in most of the alphabet agencies is literally swamped with inquiries and finds it impossible to respond. The trouble with the average citizen is that he expects too much from his government. It will save disappointing heartaches if Mr. Average Citizen will realize the limitations of the Federal Housing Administration.

The housing act permitted the establishment of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation with power to insure the accounts of private institutions who handle mortgages. Under the new act it is possible for building and loan associations, co-operative banks, and homestead groups to apply for recognition to the insurance funds, which is expected to loosen their purse strings in local communities. These private loan agencies are not yet clear as to the role they play in the renovation program. It will be necessary for the housing administration to draw up a list of procedures and make its policies before property owners may expect an easement in the flow of money to make the necessary repairs and improvements. It will require time for the government to investigate the reliability of financial institutions before it undertakes to insure mortgages to private citizens. A number of national mortgage associations may spring up throughout the country because the housing administration has the power to charter these groups.

Brokers in various cities are remaining at their offices, turning a deaf ear to vacation calls. The Securities commission is now functioning here and their initial rulings will be of the utmost importance to those making their living in the realm of high finance. The sensitiveness of Wall street to domestic and foreign happenings is astounding. Rumor-mongers, market brokers and speculators shudder at frequent intervals. The many government agencies established by the last congress deal with matters having an important bearing on the stock market. Those who salvaged enough of their fortunes from the depression own yachts and other luxuries are letting them ride at anchor. The president and congress are away. The all-powerful regulatory bodies remain to inspire fear among the followers of Wall street.

Looking for omens in the political scene you will find a variety of opinions. Attorney-General Cummings, naive contention that the new deal ventures are solely of an economic nature provoked derision among the republican campaigners. They point out that the last public address of the president definitely branded the democratic program as an issue. Speaker Henry T. Rainey in a talk in Oklahoma predicted tariff revision as a means to recover debts owed by foreign countries. Dr. Francis Sayre, son-in-law of Woodrow Wilson, and his little band of experts at the state department are at work drafting proposals for tariff bargaining. Nothing definite is expected before September when the new tariff powers will be given a real test.

Senator Clarence Dill's statement that he would not run for office again because he preferred working in the senate at Washington did not fool the local veterans. It was generally understood that Dill would quit to take a lucrative legal job with the radio crowd. He specialized in radio legislation and would like to have a chance at big money. With strikes spreading in the west, the department of labor figures prominently as a peace-maker. The lately deceased Wagner labor board and NIRA have overshadowed this federal department to the deep chagrin of Secretary Perkins. Miss Perkins has the inside track at the White House and under the new labor set-up will take an active part in labor disputes. One of the bright young men relatively submerged during the last year is Charles E. Wankel, Jr., solicitor for the labor department. He is credited with contributing heavily to recent labor legislation. Predictions are that he will come to the fore within a short time. Miss Perkins leans on this youngster for legal advice. Gray-haired attorneys say the 27-year-old barrister has what it takes.
