it was the first time that anyone had stopped there with a horseless carriage. Therefore she had no precedent for either accepting or declining the invitation. But she knew perfectly well that local etiquette demanded she should refuse.
"Fine," said Neal heartily, quite as if she had given him a swiftly affirmative answer. "I'll come for you. Now I must speak to the band."
The first of the extras, which without the slightest apparent difficulty, he succeeded in persuading the band to incorporate, came just before the intermission. It was a waltz—"The Beautiful Blue Danube." Anne had never heard it before, and when she asked Neal its name he looked at her again in unconcealed amusement as he told her.

It was written by quite a American composer—Strauss. The best thing he ever did. Listen to it, don't talk, and dance it. If you've never waltzed to it before, you don't know what dancing can be."
She had never known before what dancing could be! That was true enough, whatever the music was, far truer than he guessed. Or did he guess? She hoped he did not—feared he did—then longed to tell him so herself. But she was speechless. A silence, so less, inaudible than the solemn strains of the singing melody bound her. She could not break it, not even when, at the last lingering bars, his encircling arm tightened for an instant and then relaxed its hold, and she felt his fingers on her bare elbow, guiding her lightly.

"Out this way. To the left, under those maple trees. Let me help you. The seat is rather high."
"What was the magic of those strong, white hands, so different from any hands that had ever touched her before?"
"Do you mind if I smoke?"
"No."
"Possibly you'll join me?"
"Oh, no!"
"That wasn't fair. I knew you wouldn't. I only wanted to hear you say it."
"Why?"
"I don't know. But I like your voice. Where did you learn to use it so well?"
"I never learned at all. I've just kept trying—I've thought about it. I mean, and practiced by myself. And I love beautiful English. But I've never heard much."
"Where did you go to school?"
"In West Hamstead, at the district school until I was old enough to go to high school. I teach the district school myself now."
"And you went to high school—"
"Here in Hamstead. I lived with Mamma's Aunt Sarah. She was an old lady, a cripple. She was awfully good to me. She let me come and live with her and work for me board and food to school. If she hadn't I'd have had to go out as hired help when I was thirteen."
"Are—are your parents dead?"
"Oh, no. But they've never seemed to prosper. Pupper's had hard luck always, and Mamma isn't strong." Anne hesitated a moment, and then continued, in a burst of confidence, "I'm afraid you won't say anything about loving to hear me talk again. After hearing me call them Mamma and Pupper, but I'd have had to go out as hired help when I was thirteen."
"I see—so you've never been away from Hamstead?"
"Well, of course I go to Wallaceport on errands. And once in a while to a show."
"Wouldn't you like to go further away than that?"
"I don't like to go? What do you suppose?"
"Well, I suppose you would. So why don't you? Why don't you let me come and take you for a long drive up through the mountains in my automobile?"

Pedestrians Will You Do Your Part?

DON'T take chances! The law protects pedestrians while walking on the highway with only one exception, that they must face the traffic. Many accidents could be avoided by stepping off the pavement on the approach of an automobile.

It is often difficult for the driver at night to see people on the highway. Approaching cars may be blind. It is hoped that for the protection of pedestrians and motorists that our state laws are amended so as to compel pedestrians walking on highway at night to carry a light.

Before you buy any car at any price DRIVE one of our FORD V-8's

If you are judging the Ford car on the basis of price, you are making the mistake of your car-buying life. Ford—with a V-8 engine in a low-priced car—has shattered all "price class" ideas.

When you sit behind the wheel of a Ford V-8 (the only car with a V-8 engine selling for less than $2,500.00) and feel its tremendous wealth of smooth-flowing power... when you feel the easy riding comfort of free-action on all four wheels... when you feel the security of a Ford's extra-large, positive mechanical 4-wheel brakes... then you realize that here is a car that cannot be judged on the basis of price.

That's why we say—"Before you buy any car at any price, drive one of our Ford V-8's." A phone call will bring a demonstrator to your house... no obligation... no charge.
