IF a little band of men were to issue orders to Hitler or Mussolini, they'd probably be jailed, or worse. Yet President Roosevelt, faced by the same situation, must take such orders-and like them. For that matter, every American president since McKinley has had to do the same.

For the bossy little clique in question is the U. S. Secret Service. And one of its most impor-tant jobs is to guard the president's life. If, in performing this duty, it becomes necessary for the Secret Service men to tell him what to do, he must obey them. Whether he likes to be "shadowed" doesn't matter; any pro-tests he might make would be ignored politely but firmly.

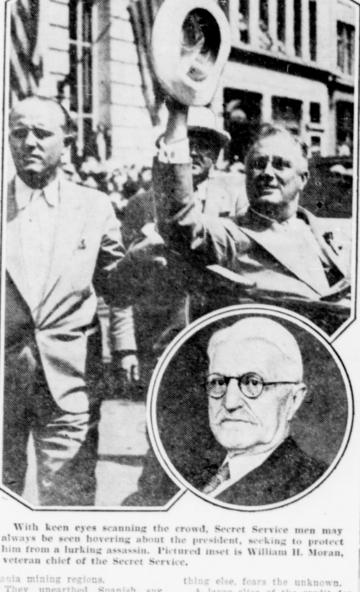

Ever since an assassin shot President McKinley in Buffalo in 1901, no president has gone even the slightest distance unguarded. The Treasury Department, which controls the Secret Service, evidently regards the life of America's chief executive as highly as it does its money, for the protection of which the Secret Service was organized in 1860.

In vaults beneath the Secret Service headquarters in Washington, billions of the nation's dollars are concealed. Billions more lie in various sub-treasuries and banks throughout the country. It is the Service's duty to see that this supply of money is not added to nor depleted by dishonest means.

An important job of the 100odd Secret Service men has been to convince criminals that they can't "make money" and get away with it. By smashing innumerable counterfeiting rings, these federal detectives have saved the government millions of dollars.

By uncovering frauds in federal offices, they have checked the loss

The public at large does not realize what it means to these volunteer firemen when the fire siren sounds. No matter where they are, no matter what they are doing, and no matter how they are dressed they must answer that fire call at once and regardless of weather conditions.

As far as the efficiency of the local fire fighters is concerned I will put them up against any similar group in the state.

No one individual appreciates their sacrifice and work more than I do.
