Big Hearted Portland

"Big Hearted Portland" paused for two minutes in observance of Armistice Day in its mad rush for the Almighty Dol-In doing so the retail merchants probably made some money from the outside communities that had patriotism enough to close, for there are always some who welcome any chance to go to Portland to spend the money made at home. But on the other hand Vancouver, Wash., restaurants probably made a neat sum that would otherwise have remained in Portland.

When the Armistice was signed 16 years ago and the word was received in Portland, all business was suspended while everybody joined in the big parade in celebration of the declaration of peaceand there wasn't a world war veteran in the bunch-for they were all "over there." Now Portland thinks it is very generous zens? Don't they all want to celebrate the close of the war?

Some say "What's the use of celebrating Armistice Day? Let's forget it, and all about the war." We notice, however, or brothers there at the time of the Armistice-and why shouldn't we celebrate the anniversary? We celebrate the anniversaries of other important days, and who history of the past century? One more or Let's vow right now to do our part. less holiday in the year will not break any business.

Portland also put its Red Cross rollcall drive a month ahead of the national dates set for that drive, and in doing so "copped" many dollars from Washington and other surrounding counties.

"Big Hearted Portland." Oh Yeah!

Testimonial to President

Chairman Priaulx of the republican committee and the Oregonian are trying to take some solace in the selection of Judge Ekwall and Congressman Mott as republicans for congress, Earl Snell and C. A. Howard, republicans, as secretary of state and superintendent of instruction, respectively.

So far as our reading is concerned we have noticed very little criticism of Roosevelt and the New Deal from either Ekwall or Mott and both have professed liberal ideas. Congressman Mott supported practically all New Deal legislation and has openly advocated measures that are even more liberal. Strength of opponents was also a factor. As for Snell he is personally very popular throughout the state and his office has little or nothing to do with New Deal policies. The same would also apply to Howard.

A better expression of the attitude of the people here is seen in the election of General Martin as governor and many legislators with New Deal beliefs. This should be a favorable combination that will mean much to the state in harmonizing recovery efforts locally.

The vote here and elsewhere is a splendid testimonial to our great president and the efforts he is making to improve the lot of the average American citizen. Let us all co-operate in the interest of the federal program and forget partisanship for the common good.

Respect to the Flag

Do the children of our homes and schools know the proper etiquette of the United States Flag? Observations during the Armistice parade and ceremonies make us doubt if not only the children but adults know, or remember, the proper respect which should be shown our Flag. This should be taught in all school rooms. A few minutes each day for the pledge of allegiance, a Flag drill and the proper placing of the Flag, would do a great deal to inspire patriotism in the boys and girls, and when they become men and women they will not forget the proper courtesies to the Stars and Stripes-the Flag of our country and the grandest Flag in the world.

When the "Star Spangled Banner" is played or sung, face the Flag, stand and remain standing until it is finished. When the Flag is passing on parade or in review, if you are walking, halt; if sitting, rise, stand at attention, and uncover your head, if a man. One important thing that is particularly noticeable is that training should stress the rights of others. Children should be required to be quiet so as not to interfere with other people, who are enjoying the

Our primary laws are sometimes most abused by those who in most cases seem to revere them most.

Let's Do Our Part

"Let's Sell Oregon to Ourselves!" This the slogan for the week of November 17 to 24, when manufacturers, retailers and consumers are asked to test, critically, the production of Oregon - whether from forest, farm or factory-to learn first-hand that Oregon quality has no superior and that it can be purchased economically. Purchase of that which Oregon produces and makes will build greater payrolls and furnish greater markets for the goods of farm and factory. We owe it to ourselves as selfish individuals to do everything we possibly can to promote the interest and welfare of Oregon prod-

Close our factories and where would we find ourselves? A land without payrolls and without need for raw materials. We would have immediately to send our money to outside territory to buy products needed to sustain us. Where would the money come from? It would not come. because industry and payrolls are the source of our money. Take on the other hand and increase the number of factories-enlarge and extend those we now have-increase our payrolls and our demand for raw materials - and we have the opposite picture - a community, a state or an empire enlarging its payrolls, increasing its number of employed men and women and increasing the amount of money in circulation to be spent in every line of endeavor.

Not only should this plan be applied to the products of Oregon, but our local people in town and country should keep in mind that the products from this community are quality goods and merit every bit of encouragement. Here we have the Ray-Maling cannery with its canned and frozen products from the farm, the Carnation condenser, the Perfection Bakery, the Home Laundry, West Woods Novelin giving its veteran employes the day off ties, L. B. Haley chicken cannery, Tualawith pay. How about the rest of the citi- tin Valley Winery, Gates Pipe & Investment Co., Hillsboro Lumber Co., grain dealers, Royal Soda Works, the printing offices and many others that employ people. When you buy the products of these plants and patronize local stores you that it is not the people who had sons are helping a friend and a neighbor. In other words you are doing just what you would have the other fellow do for you. More goods bought at home means more employment, more money in circulaknows of a more important day in the tion and increased standards of living.

Bankers to Co-operate

One of the decisions arrived at during the nationwide convention of American bankers provides for closer co-operation with President Roosevelt and his administration in working out details of the New Deal to the better advantage of the people as

In recent months, and since it was disclosed by a nation-wide vote that bankers were one of two groups a majority of which had, apparently, not yet sensed that the New Deal was playing a big part in lifting the nation out of its depression, many of the larger banking institutions were under fire; in fact, in some quarters, it was contended that passive resistance, if not obstruction, was the policy being observed by financial leaders. In view of what had gone before, and the resultant weakening of public confidence in banks, it was, to our way of think-ing, an extremely short-sighted policy, for, whether bankers liked it or not, there could be no question as to the attitude of the general public towards the president and his New Deal-and indications today point to an even closer understanding between the chief executive and the greater majority of Ameri-

But there is quite another reason why American bankers might be expected to closely co-operate with the president and the New Deal, and this reason is of such recent origin that we are surprised that any banker could already have forgotten it. Let us refer to banking conditions just over two years -prior to the nation-wide bank holiday of March 4 to 15, 1933. In every section of the nation banks were closing their doors in such numbers that it almost ceased to be news. Panic conditions prevailed when the president, in an effort to save the remnants of public confidence in banking, declared a national bank holiday and announced that only such banks as were in liquid and sound condition would be permitted to open their doors without restrictions when the holiday ended. It was a drastic move, but fully warranted by conditions if ethical banking as understood prior to the panic, was to prevail. Public confidence in bankers had been reduced to a low point, as was evidenced by the withdrawal of huge sums of deposits, which were hidden away in various kinds of repositories or placed for safe keep-ing in postal savings. That was the condition when bank holiday was declared. On April 12, 1933, 5078 national banks were permitted to open their doors, and by a month later 7932 state banks were again in operation, and by the end of September of last year 15,154 national and state banks had been permitted to resume business operations. On June 30, 1933, deposits in federal reserve banks totaled $26,587,000,000, but, owing to reurning public confidence and the measure of deposit insurance provided by banks at the insistence of President Roosevelt, deposits, by June 30 of this ar had increased in federal reserve banks to $31,-012,000,000, while deposits in state banks had, in the short space of one year, increased from $25,642,739,879 to $26,807,167,859.

Now let us turn to the record of bank failures in the depression years and subsequent to the inception of the New Deal in banking. Between January 1, 1929, and March 4, 1933, 7578 banks, with advertised deposits in excess of $5,914,287,000 went into the hands of liquidators. From March 4, 1933, to October 1, of this year, there have been only four bank failures, with deposits of $1,410,000, of which $582,000 were guaranteed by insurance.

Yet, in face of this record, we read that small percentage of the bankers-who have, through the tervention of President Roosevelt and his administration, recovered some of that self assurance which had oozed away prior to the nation-wide bank holiday—are finding their way on to the printed page through the medium of partisan and obstructive criticism of the New Deal. It is to laugh!-Hood

Upstate business men will find themselves in sympathy with the efforts of Portland Legionnaires to secure closing of the stores of the big metropolis Armistice Day. But these efforts would be amplified if folks from upstate communities would cut out their shopping expeditions to Portland on the day when their home-town merchants are decent enough to observe this legal holiday.-Hood River

In this brief period, despite a solid front of newspaper opposition and the desperate resistance of the tax-spending public officials and employes, we have educated the people and polled a vote; the size of which is proof that this is the livest single issue in Oregon today.

During the campaign the opposition repeatedly proposed that the measure in its present form be voted down and that after the vote, we should all get together to work out a comprehensive plan of tax reform, in which real property will be accorded the relief to which it is unquestionably entitled.
