Peters Appreciative of Support Accorded Him

Queen Anne's Lace By Frances Parkinson Keyes

He spread out a light wrap she had brought with her, and motioned to her to sit down.

"Well," he questioned, still lightly, when looking a protest but uttering none, she had settled herself.

"I don't cry, Anne. There'll be nothing to cry about, you'll see. And you feel sure Neal doesn't suspect at all?"

"How could he?" she asked simply. "You mean, it would never occur to him that his best friend would try to approach—his wife?"

"You're probably right. Neal with all his faults, is intrinsically honest. Also, he is not overwise. Which makes it easier for him to be honest."

"You shan't speak of Neal like that," flashed Anne, "as if it were ridiculous to be honest and—decent!"

"It isn't ridiculous. But it's sometimes inadequate," he went on, as she stared at him, apparently too stunned to answer, "I must ask you to believe that I haven't gone about this with malice aforethought, so to speak. When I came to your house last spring, I pitied you, and admired you, and I wanted you to have good time."

"I do believe it," said Anne. "But I was very lonely. I'd been through a dreadful domestic experience."

"And now you want me to do the same thing to Neal that you did to me?"

CHAPTER IX TO THE DAY of her death Anne Conrad remembered her first winter in Washington as a senator's wife, with driving insistence.

her rooms, Anne was suddenly confronted with a large lounge of light. Neal had heard her approaching footsteps—he must have been listening for them—and had flung the door of their little salon wide open. And dashing out to meet her, he had almost smothered her in a bear hug.

"Oh, Anne, where have you been so long? I thought you'd never come! Do hurry! You can't imagine what's happened. Anne—Anne—"

She snatched at the flimsy bit of blue paper which he was waving in her face. It was signed by Low, the governor of their state. And it read:

"SHELTON JUNIOR SENATOR. DIED THIS MORNING. HOPE YOU COULD BEAR THE BURDEN OF APPOINTMENT FROM ME HIS SEAT UNITED STATES SENATE."

CHAPTER IX TO THE DAY of her death Anne Conrad remembered her first winter in Washington as a senator's wife, with driving insistence.

She and Neal discussed the question of the temporary home all the way over on the boat coming back from Paris, and finally decided, on account of their children, that a small temporary home in the rowed out to Washington.

"I am Mrs. Conrad," she replied calmly, and went on washing windows. Before the sun had gone down, Anne had been surreptitiously photographing the view of the water from her last window; and the following evening, this distorted likeness of herself, together with the heavy sounding "Senator's" wig, had been pinned to the wall of the "Pupper and Mummer" with gold and silver tacks.

"Will you please show me what I asked you for in the beginning; small conveniently arranged, and at a reasonable rental? Unless it is clear to you now what I want, I think I had better go to another apartment."

The agent was grieved. It had not occurred to him that such a young, pretty, and gentle woman should be unable to see her own blunders. Allowing her to see that his feelings were hurt, he led her from one small dinky dirty beyond description, and in most of them both plumbing and heating.

"I know, Neal. I'll try again. But how can I be so fully hard?"

MR. THINK-SO STRIKES A SNAG

A business man, useful in community affairs; raised a splendid family of young people; has lived a clean life—so says Mr. Think-So; now Mr. Think-So if you die tonight, will you die trusting in your own good record to save you from the pit? You think so?

Our good record! Can it clean up our life page? What is my good life in God's holy eyes? "As filthy rags," says the Good Book—Isaiah 64:2.

But God can where we can't. 1. God sent his Son. By raising back to life a man four days dead and by countless other miracles, Christ proved himself to be very God of very God.

2. Christ lived in a real human body like ours. He had every urge to sin that wells up within us. But He was very God of very God and came through guiltless.

3. Then He took your sin and guilt, and death-sentence and died under it all to save you. Christ proved himself to be very God of very God.

4. God wants you that much; sends his Son to buy you back; sends his Holy Spirit to plead with you. "Turn back, face about, come home," is the plea of the seeking God.

Before you sleep tonight kneel down and tell God you take Christ as the one who paid it all and that from now on you will search the Bible to learn how to love, trust and obey Him; looking to Him from moment to moment for power to live the new life.

Come on men—let's give the truth as it is in Christ Jesus to the last unsaved soul in our country. George N. Taylor, Beaverton, Oregon.—Pajd Adv.
