State College Dean Explains Production Control Plan

College News Service—The present tendency among leaders of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in Washington is to look upon current programs of crop curtailment and control as temporary expedients necessary until the international trade problem has been adequately dealt with, reports W. A. Schoenfeld, dean of agriculture at Oregon State college, who has just returned from a business trip to the capital.

As long as surpluses here make the export market a buyers' market, it is difficult to make satisfactory trade agreements, the leaders say. When this condition is corrected through programs of production control, then it is believed that satisfactory arrangements may be made to exchange a greater volume of American farm products for goods produced best in other countries, and thereby maintain the international trade essential to greatest American prosperity.

Effects upon the consumer and producer of the present crop control expedients are discussed in a recent statement by Dr. F. C. Howe, consumers' counsel in the AAA. He dealt particularly with the increased price of pork products, saying that the farmer is getting a major part of this increased price.

"Some find it difficult to understand why hog raisers should reduce production when millions want pork," said Dr. Howe. "On the other hand farmers find it difficult to understand why factories should close down or produce less when the farmer wants factory products.

"So long as goods must be sold at a price, and so long as their supply depends on the purchasing power and not the need people feel for them, farmers like other business men are forced to adjust their production to the market.

"In higher prices for pork, consumers are paying hog producers for their investment and labor. In turn hog producers should be able to pay their part of the city workers' return to fair income. That is the process of recovery," Howe concluded.

Other AAA leaders dealing with the "surplus vs. distribution" question have pointed out that while distribution systems have admittedly been faulty, the collapse of the normal export markets brought a condition in many commodities which no amount of perfect domestic distribution could have corrected. The capacity of the human stomach, they said, could not have handled the wheat surplus, for example, even on a basis of free distribution, if production had been maintained at former levels.

board for savings under the tuition and transportation items.

Handling of transportation for students in the thinly settled and remote sections of the county was one of the biggest problems before the board. Another problem existed to satisfy some persons in the more densely populated sections for the reason that too many requested bus service close to their homes. The board stated that good service was demanded, but that the public insisted on a minimum cost. At the first of the year the board entered into contracts with high schools for tuition and transportation of students from the non-high school area.

Members of the board include A. M. Janssen, chairman; William Sahnow, vice-chairman; O. B. Kraus, secretary; Frank Bailey, Harry Eliander and Ferd Langer.

good quality. Either hydrated lime or quicklime may be used. One essential in either case is that it should be of good quality and if it is hydrated lime it should not have been kept on hand for a long time before using it. In other words, it should be fresh.

Some growers prefer to spray with a gun while there are some advocates of the spray rod. It does not make much difference which method is used as more depends upon the operator than upon the method of application. Instructions for making home-made Bordeaux can be obtained at the county agent office.
