EATIN' UP THE SCRAPS When Thanksgiving day is over and the company is gone, And it's gettin' time for supper, Ma puts the kettle on. Sets on the kitchen table Taste bread and jam, perhaps, Then opens up the cupboard And takes out all the scraps. The cold leftover dressing, The jelly cranberry sauce, A mince pie fixed up fancy With lattice bars across. And then the turkey remnants From off the topmost shelf; And sets them in the middle Where each can help himself.

By then the kettle's ready, And she makes a pot of tea, And we all set down together, Just pa and ma and me. And with no one there a-watchin' What fork we use, or spoon, Somethin' that cold leftover Taste better than at noon. Ma, she takes the tailpiece, And pe, he takes the neck, And me, I get the scrapple And we all just chaw like heck. We pass the sweet potatoes, And we keep an eye on pa, For fear he'll beat us to it, And eat up all the stew. Ma, maybe tells a story, And pe, he cracks a joke; And maybe over nothin' We laugh till we most choke. And when the plates are empty We finish up the tea; It's almost like a party For us and ma and me. You can have your swell course dinners And then all the fancy trimmings, But to me, the real Thanksgiving' Is when you eat the scraps.
