

Martin Scores Lobby Action

Old Game Body Discharged; New Commission Named

Governor Martin discharged the entire game commission Tuesday and in the same sweeping gesture appointed five new commissioners. Preceding the discharge, the governor called a joint session of the legislature and delivered a scathing denunciation of politicians who seek to block passage of bills which make up his program.

New commissioners appointed include Lew Wallace of Multnomah, Charles E. Reiley of Klamath Falls, Dexter Rice of Roseburg, E. E. Wilson of Corvallis and George K. Aiken of Ontario. Members of the game body discharged were Carl G. Silvers, Dr. Irving E. Vining of Ashland, Dr. J. C. Vandeventer of Bend, Matt Corrigan of McMinnville, and Dr. L. E. Hibbard of Burns.

Action followed appearance of a delegation before a house committee in opposition to house bill No. 1 on the grounds that if game commission members went into the general fund these would be diverted to other uses. Governor Martin scored "the display put on by a representative of the game commission." He further declared that fish and game funds would go to the propagation of fish and game. "They will go to feed the fish, not politicians," he declared.

SALEM—Impatient at the delay of the legislature in enacting his program into law and incensed by the obstructionist tactics of the interests opposed to his program, Governor Martin Tuesday carried his fight directly to the lawmakers in person.

Appearing before the senators and representatives meeting in joint session the governor scathingly denounced the politicians who have been appearing before the legislative committees in opposition to his budgetary control program and urged immediate approval of his program in order to stop waste and extravagance in expenditure of public funds might be halted.

Sportsmen of the state, the governor said, are unduly alarmed over the fate of their funds under his plan, who would put all fees into the general fund to be disbursed only on legislative appropriations. There is no desire to divert these funds to other purposes, he assured the lawmakers. Fees paid by fishermen, he declared, would be used in "feeding the fish, not the politicians."

It was the governor's first appearance before the legislators since he delivered his inaugural message on the opening day of the session, although he has taken advantage of the opportunity to address a number of messages to the house and senate in support of administration measures. The governor's straightforward appeal for support and his denunciation of the forces opposed to his program aroused much favorable comment and is believed to have won the administration much support from among the members who were theretofore undecided upon their course of action.

A number of big bills have found their way into the house and senate hoppers during the week. Senator Zimmerman withdrew his bill for the repeal of the criminal syndicalism act and introduced another measure referring the issue to the voters. Another "hot" subject upon which the voters may have to decide, if the legislators approve, is the fish fight between the fishermen and the cannery operators. A measure introduced into the senate hopper this week refers to the voters the question of barring all fixed fishing gear from Oregon streams.

All attorneys who practice in Oregon courts, as well as all judges of the circuit and supreme bench, would be required to become active members of the Oregon bar association if a bill introduced by the judiciary committee of the house and senate, is passed.

The governor's planning commission bill was given the official "ok" of the house and is now ready for final action by the senate, where no considerable opposition is anticipated since most of the teeth have been pulled out of the original bill. The Erwin bill, changing the date for the primary election from May to September, is still hanging fire. The bill was up for final passage Monday, but was sent back to the committee on elections for further consideration.

This was the declaration of H. E. Cosby, extension specialist, who spoke Thursday before 31 turkey growers at Forest Grove.

Baseball League Adds New Teams

Formation of the Tualatin Valley Baseball league for the 1935 season with eight teams entered will be completed Tuesday evening at the Forest Grove chamber of commerce. Drexel H. Brown of Portland was re-elected president at the first league meeting last week. George Wick of Hillsboro was named vice-president and Roy Miller of Forest Grove secretary-treasurer.

Teams held over from last year include Amity, Carlton, Hillsboro, Verboort, Sherwood and Newberg. In making up an eight-team league, Forest Grove, a former member, will be taken in and applications considered from Vernonia and St. Paul. Sunset baseball league will hold its first meeting at 8 p. m. next Thursday at Aloha, according to F. E. Cummings, secretary-treasurer. Prospects appear promising for the 1935 season. New applications have been received from Tigard, Sherwood, Maplewood, Beaverton, Cedar Mill, Blooming, North Plains, Garden Home, and Banks.

Local Tualatin Valley and Sunset league teams will meet at 8 p. m. Friday at the Ray-Maling cannery to discuss activity for the 1935 season. Hillsboro holds franchises in both leagues and local fans will again be assured of a game each Sunday during the season on the local field. Bill Joos will manage the Sunset squad while a manager to succeed Wick is to be selected for the Tualatin Valley team.

Local teams plan to work together in soliciting the support of local fans. An advertising plan has been presented and favorably endorsed by several merchants. All persons interested in baseball are asked to attend the meeting Friday. Sunset team shows promise for 1935 season, according to Joos. He asks that all players signed with the team last year turn out for the meeting as well as men who wish to try out. Wick has requested that former Hillsboro Tualatin Valley league players attend and bring their equipment.

Turkey Men Hear Cosby

Western turkey growers must build up their stock through careful selection, breeding and management and must hold down diseases and their flocks in order to retain the industry in the west. This was the declaration of H. E. Cosby, extension specialist, who spoke Thursday before 31 turkey growers at Forest Grove.

Turkey industry was driven westward by a disease known as "blackhead," according to Cosby. Free range, availability and discovery that chickens are dormant carriers of "blackhead" and should not be kept separate from other birds. Cosby stated: Birds must be carefully selected on the basis of proven production and excessively large birds should be avoided. He pointed out that breeding stock should be selected early in the fall and kept separate from other birds.

Incubation of turkey eggs presents a number of problems, all of which have not been solved due to the rapid development in this field. Cosby stated: Experimental work is being conducted regularly with the hope that this phase of the industry will see rapid improvement. Cosby discussed the various mating methods and outlined practices employed by growers. He declared that many successful growers were finding it advisable to retain extra toms to replace death loss and in some cases to keep two sets of toms to use alternately.

Discussion of the handling of turkey eggs took up a considerable part of Cosby's talk. He declared the eggs should be gathered daily and kept at a temperature of from 40 to 60 degrees. Tilting of cases at a 45-degree angle and changing of position daily was recommended. Experimental data cited indicated that eggs should be incubated within 14 days after being laid.

Size of the hatching egg should not be larger than 3 1/2 ounces, he said. Eggs smaller than 2 1/2 ounces are not satisfactory. Cosby declared it would pay growers to take time and effort to weigh each egg and not take chances on poor incubating results. Feeding of the breeding flock is another phase of turkey management that is often neglected, according to Cosby. Breeding mash was recommended for hens by the first of January and mixed oil and green feed cited as essential feeds. He quoted experimental data to show that costs were about 27 per cent more per pound to raise turkeys on dry feed than on succulent feed.

Necessity of protein was pointed out by Cosby. He declared that female pouls required more protein than males and recommended that both be given feed with sufficient protein. Discussion of problems of special interest to growers present followed the talk. Brooding will be discussed at the next meeting March 27.

Legion Head Urges Pay Adjustment

Members of the groups must feel and live Americanism, that it should be a religion with them. She agreed with the national commander, who said every "ism" should be eliminated from America but "Americanism." Mrs. Gunn urged the support of the legion in the popping sales because of its help in carrying out the program of both the legion and the auxiliary.

Red feathers of courage were awarded Argonne post at Sherwood for "going over the top" in membership by Carl Moser, department adjutant. Moser urged effort on membership to back up the program of the organization. He cited the work of the Oregon department in forming the legion's Americanism program for upholding the constitution and American institutions.

Formation of a new legion post at Beaverton was announced by E. B. Nedry of Tigard, district commander. Other speakers included Commanders Louis Beckwith of Sherwood, Louis Busch of Forest Grove, F. E. Davis of Banks and W. P. Cyrus of Hillsboro. Committee reports were given by coun-

Poultry Market Problem Cited

Supplying local poultry markets and disposal of surplus are the two principal phases of the poultry marketing problem in Oregon, according to G. C. Keeney, manager of the Pacific Producers' association. This statement was made last Tuesday before 75 poultrymen attending the monthly Washington county poultry meet at Beaverton. Par eastern markets are good outlets for surplus since the east will pay a premium for fancy white-shelled eggs. Keeney stated.

Pacific Poultry Producers' association is one of the five western co-operations in Oregon, according to G. C. Keeney, manager of the Pacific Producers' association. This organization, by having marketing specialists in the east and having direct contacts with western producers, is able to secure as reliable market information as any marketing organization.

This union of western cooperatives is of marked value to the western poultry producers since all of the Pacific coast eggs are marketed through the same channels, he said. This does away with excess competition, reducing marketing costs and makes it possible for the eastern offices to handle large shipments. A better control of the market situation and to open new outlets for the egg supply is thus obtained.

Keeney further pointed out that the present egg market is very favorable. The cold snap in the east has resulted in an increase in demand for western eggs, he said. Following Keeney's talk, discussion regarding various phases of the cooperative organizations was held.

The next poultry meeting will be held on February 26. Mrs. Lulu Davis, 59, of Gaston, died Tuesday in Hillsboro. She was born in Hillsboro July 6, 1875, the daughter of Jacob and Mary Scott. She was married to J. W. Davis at Vancouver, Wash., in November, 1917. It is not known whether or not her husband is living. She is survived by a sister, Mrs. Nellie Winder of Enterprise, and a brother, Lovel Williams of Astoria.

Grangers Oppose Milk Bill Change

Letters asking county legislators to oppose the proposed amendment to the state milk control law were forwarded to Salem this week by members of the Hillsboro Grange. This action was taken in accordance with a decision reached last Wednesday during the Pomona Grange meeting at Tualatin.

Resolution seeking to curtail the number of representatives in the state legislature was laid on the table following lengthy discussion by grangers attending the Pomona Grange meeting.

Five candidates were initiated during the evening meeting. Following the ceremony, the Winona Grange presented a program.

New street signs are now being put in place in Hillsboro and the new house numbers and street names may be used in mailing addresses after the first of the week, according to George McGee, city manager. Petitions Here for "Red" Curb
