Air Queen Suffers Fate of Sister Ship

When the U. S. S. Macon, above, plunged into the Pacific off Point Sur, Calif., 119 miles south of San Francisco, she suffered a fate similar to that of her sister ship, the Akron. In April, 1933, the Akron crashed into the Atlantic off the New Jersey coast, carrying 73 men to their deaths and leaving afloat, as a memento of the tragedy, the tangled wreckage shown below. Nearly all the Macon's crew were saved, including Commander Herbert V. Wiley, right, one of the three men who survived the Akron catastrophe.

Need Sustained Timber Yield Seen by Regional Forester

(By C. J. Buck, Regional Forester)
"What do the people of Washington county do for a living?" is one of the questions asked in a population survey just being made by the forest service in connection with the sustained timber yield program proposed for Oregon and Washington.

The answer to this question shows that in 1930 agriculture furnished roughly 78 per cent of employment in the basic industries of the county. Timber furnished 19 per cent and other basic industries 3 per cent. Without these basic industries there would be no employment and no population, according to the survey.

The survey shows that the average annual sawing production in the county for the five years prior to 1930 was 162 million board feet, a large part of these logs being shipped off for manufacture elsewhere. In 1929 there were 27 sawmills in the county which cut 135 million board feet, although in 1933 the mills had decreased to 24 in number, cutting only 50 million board feet.

With the return of normal conditions a strong "comeback" in the timber industry is predicted and renewed timber activity is now being forced as a result of the disastrous fire of 1933. However, Washington county is faced with the problem of sustaining its timber industry without further impairing its essential economic structure and tax base, according to the report. Washington county's virgin timber totals approximately three billion feet est officials, "must not blind us to the fact that primarily most of our productive land is valuable only for growing timber. Whatever additional industries we gain should not prevent us from fully capitalizing our richest industrial asset—timber."

The survey indicates that, because of its virgin timber supply Oregon is one of the few states in the union where a sustained timber yield program can be put into operation without curtailing industrial activity pending the time when new forest crops will be available for cutting.
