Another Good Idea

A plan has been broached in Washington to keep Americans at home in the event of war abroad in order to prevent such incidents as the Lusitania sinking from arousing the nation.

Only persons with compelling reasons for travel would be permitted to run the risk of venturing into a belligerent country or into a danger zone.

Every step taken that will tend to prevent this country from being involved in war should have the backing of the great mass of American people.

Freed of Politics, The Rangers, Texas' 'Royal Mounties, Will Ride Again

After two years, during which their star seemed on the wane, the Texas Rangers are overcoming the toughest foe they have ever faced—politics.

Nearly a century ago a west Texas settler lived precariously. Some years before, the wild Comanche and Kiowa tribes had merged for a war on the intruding whites.

These swarthy rustlers learned quickly that the way of the transgressor was hard, and that it was wise to stay on their own side of the border.

Upon her entrance into office in 1933, Gov. Miriam Ferguson, as one of her first official acts, all but wiped clean the roster of old-time Rangers.

The lances of the red men proved no match for the rifles of their new enemy. After subduing the tribes, the fearless, straight-shooting Rangers turned their attention to Mexican cattle thieves.

TEXAS evildoers for long have held the Rangers in monumental awe. This, perhaps more than anything, explains why a band of 50 men was able to maintain law and order over a great, wild, and mountainous country.

Leaving of Regulation with the States Advocated

(By College News Service) Oregon butter manufacturers, distributors and producers accepted the role of leadership in the proposed western butter marketing agreement by filling the record with accounts of the success of the Oregon state butter code at the hearing in Portland held as one of seven conducted by officials of the agricultural adjustment administration.

The regional plan is admittedly patterned much after the Oregon system.

So unanimous was the sentiment as to the value of the Oregon agreement, operated now for about a year, that their predominant testimony urged that any federal agreement set up for the 11 western states leave all regulation within the individual states to the state authorities, confining the federal supervision to the interstate aspects of the trade.

Such a position was taken officially by the Oregon butter code committee of 10 members, and the Oregon Butter Manufacturers' Association. The only opposition to any federal marketing agreement came from representatives of large concerns doing business over several states.

Major practices intended to be established by the federal agreement, already operative in Oregon, are adoption of the A. B. C. system of butter marking for the retail trade, a minimum spread between butter and butterfat prices, fixing the markup between bulk and print prices, and payment for cream on a quality basis.

Unfair trade practices objected to at the hearing and which would be eliminated in the proposed agreement include use of excessive or varying prices for butterfat by the same buyer in different localities as a means of driving out competition or gaining other advantage.

It was testified that manufacturers in one state paid as much as four cents less for local producers than they paid producers in another state, where it was desired to obtain business. Producers at the meeting denounced this practice.

The Portland hearing was the third of a series of seven being held on the proposed agreement. The federal men, headed by Marvin J. Kelley of Washington, D. C., and including A. E. Engstrom of Astoria, now on special duty with the AAA, expressed gratification at the constructive testimony given at the Oregon hearing.
